Check energy information

When the time comes to buy a new stove, water heater, refrigerator or other large home appliance, Pacific Power urges customers to insist on seeing the "EnergyGuide" label for energy savings information.

Pacific Power manager Bob McConnell says the bright yellow sticker is normally attached to the front of the appliance and provides an estimate of the annual cost to operate the unit.

"We believe our customers should insist on the most energy efficient appliance possible," McConnell said. "The EnergyGuide label is designed to assist customers make wise choices in their appliance purchases—helping them separate energy efficient models from energy wasters."

McConnell added that Pacific encourages its customers to use energy wisely—even though the energy services company has an ample supply of electricity.

"Purchasing an appliance with an estimated annual cost of operation displayed on the front is a good way to assure the best buy for the dollar," he said.

More information is available by calling the local Pacific Power office at 475-6105.
