Most patients satisfied with care

Mountain View Hospital is continuing to do a good job of patient care and 99% of the patients that stayed at the Madras facility in 1990 would return, reports a study recently released by officials of the District. Through an active inquiry system, the hospital closely monitors patients' opinions in an effort to identify problems and improve services. Prior to discharge, the patient is given a questionnaire to survey opinions on different elements of the hospital's services. Areas examined in the questionnaire include the admission process, nursing care, physician service and room comfort. Food services, ancillary care staff performance and the discharge process are also reviewed in the survey.

During the past year, over 30% of those staying at Mountain View Hospital returned the survey. The nursing staff received very high marks for their care. The Mountain View nurses were reported to be courteous, knowledgeable, available and responsive to requests 99% of the time. Physicians treating patients at Mountain View also received high marks especially in categories relating to answering patients questions and informing the patient of the reasons for their admission. The surgeons at Mountain View all received very high scores for satisfactorily answering patient questions. Patient rooms on the medical/surgical floor and in the obstetrics department were reported to be clean, attractive, and orderly by almost every patient. They also reported that they found the fixtures and appliances such as televisions and phones in proper working order 97% of the time.

The District's dietary department also received good evaluations. Meal plans met the patient's needs, food appeared appetizing and diets were believed to be appropriate by the vast majority of those completing the survey. Food requests were also handled promptly reported 98% of the patients.

When asked to rate Mountain View staff in terms of friendliness and efficiency, the personnel in physical therapy and housekeeping received excellent ratings four times as often as they received an average score. In fact, the entire staff received average or excellent ratings on friendliness and efficiency 98% of the time.

Another department at Mountain View receiving high marks was the Business Office. Almost all of the patient surveys indicated that the Business Office staff handled admissions promptly in an efficient, courteous and confidential manner.

This is the third complete calendar year Mountain View has used the patient survey as part of the Quality Assurance program.

A separate questionnaire developed two years ago for use by outpatient surgery clients helps the District to track the quality of services offered in this increasingly utilized area of care. High scores were again given to the operating room nursing staff for pre- and post-operative instruction and patient and comfort.

"We're very proud of the quality of care we provide at Mountain View and pleased to see that our patients continue to think that we do a good job too," noted Administrator Ron Barnes. "The use of the patient satisfaction questionnaire has helped us to identify problems previously unknown to the District and it also helps us to track areas earlier identified as needing improvement. Ninety-nine percent of our patients responded that they would return if medically warranted. This lets us know that we have a facility and team of health care professionals of which the District patrons can be extremely proud," remarked Barnes.
