When I feel the life rush of point break, I am having a brush with life. Wind through my hair, sun watching down over me makes the stress become less with every breath. That can scar the rest, that makes you feel like the best. With a twist that can rip a gash without even thinking fast, and the gamble of life will pass. Without beware of the blackness that can crush in one second or just a blink to the very distinct, when the point of life isn't so pink. But cold blood red and not dead.

Diabetes: an illness that causes mixed feelings

Diabetes affects the whole family — not just the person who has diabetes. People with diabetes have many feelings about their illness. These feelings are normal for people with diabetes, and for their families and friends.

What are some feelings that people with diabetes may have? Different people have different feelings about their diabetes. At times, they may find it hard to believe that they have diabetes at all. At other times, they may feel angry about having diabetes. Sometimes people with diabetes may act angry at other people or things, when they are really angry about having diabetes. People with diabetes may feel that they don't cope with other problems as well as they did before they had diabetes.

What are some feelings that family members may have? Family members may have these same feelings. You may find it hard to believe that a member of your family has diabetes. It may also be hard to believe that all of the changes suggested by health professionals are needed. At other times, you may feel angry about these changes and how they affect your lives. Sometimes you may feel helpless because you can't take away their diabetes or solve their problems.

What can we do about those feelings? As a family, you have faced other problems in the past. Think about how you and your family handled your feelings then. Usually, the way your family has handled things in the past can help you handle diabetes now.

The most important thing you can do is to talk with each other about your feelings and how diabetes is affecting your lives. Talking honestly is a good way to support each other.

How else can we help? We know that people who have diabetes do better when they have the help and support of family and friends. People with diabetes need to make changes in their daily life. As a family member, you may also choose to make these changes. It is never easy to change the way you live. But it is easier if you have the help and support of those around you.

with diabetes are in charge of taking care of themselves. You can't protect them from everything, but you can help them to handle things better.

Are there other sources of support for myself or my family member? Talking about diabetes and the problems of daily life can help. Talking with a close friend or another family member might be a good idea. There are other sources of support for you and your family. Sometimes it helps to talk with someone who is not a friend or family member. It may help to talk to a minister or priest, mental health care counselor, or mental health clinic worker. If you find that your feelings are too much for you, it is especially important that you find extra help. Your health care professional can help you find other sources of support.

If you have any questions regarding the Diabetes Program at the Warm Springs Clinic please call Candace Reich, Program Coordinator, or Susan Mathew, Diabetes Nurse Educator at the Clinic.
