Patience learned while growing up

It seems like every time you pick up the phone, a child needs something NOW. Children need to know that you are there to answer their questions. But, they also need to learn that interrupting is not okay.

Toddlers and preschoolers have very short attention spans. They can't wait long when they need something. Try to avoid problems by planning phones calls during naps or after bedtime. Three- and fouryear-olds can wait for short periods of time. Help them learn to wait by holding their hand or rubbing their back while you finish talking.

:For older children, set rules ahead of time. Len them know whether or not it is okay to write you a note while on the phone. If there is an emergency, teach them how to say "excuse me" and wait for your response. Also, make sure they know what will happen if they don't follow the rules, such as no TV, and be sure t follow through.

Most important of all, set a good example by not interrupting your child. Listen to what they have to say and praise them when they do remember not to interrupt.

3. No past due child care bills or Children benefit when parents are involved

Children benefit greatly when parents take an active role in their education. Children will usually: ENJOY LEARNING and school life submitted to have child placed in the and attitudes—and do better in school, DEVELOP CONFIDENCE in themselves and BE BETTER PREPARED for the future. Parents benefit, too! You'll feel good about yourself knowing that you're helping your child get a good education.
