EDUCATION

COAIE and the Redmond Park District will be hosting a Native American Day on Saturday June 11th, from 11:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m. on the grounds of the Redmond Park District Office. We are looking for artists that are willing to demonstrate and/or offer simple workshop/ classes. In exchange, artist will be offered a small honorarium and a free booth space in which they could sell or display their own wares. A small amount would be available to cover mileage and an effort would be made to provide food for participants. Individuals wishing to set up or stay overnight on Friday evening may do so with the pool rest room area open for your use at no charge. If you know of other individuals at Warm Springs that might be interested in participating in this event (foods, dancing, drumming, children's activities, information booths, etc.), please contact Gretchen Bass at 9320-

CAMBELL'S SOUP LABEL

UPDATE Recently, the Campbell's soup labels were trimmed and counted to see where WSE stands. We did reach our goal of right at 4,000 labels, but will be holding them until next year to try and trade them in for a larger prize. As mentioned in an earlier newsletter, it takes almost 3,000 labels just to get a basketball. Please continue to send in labels throughout the year. Thank you for your support!!

INSIGHTS FOR PARENTS Helping Children Focus On Saving Our Earth

As our country celebrates Earth Day on April 22, much attention will be directed at ways we can make our world a better place to live. We would like to invite you to work with us to environment throughout the year.

Here are some ways you can help your children understand how unique and precious our environment is and how they can enhance it for future generations:

Recognize that you are a role model. One way you can do this is by practicing and involving your chil-dren in waste recycling. By separating the garbage and being responsible for saving recyclable materials, your children can play an important role in helping our environment.

If money is earned from the aluminum cans, glass or newspapers you return, let your "helper" share in some of the profits.

Discuss the concept of recycling with your children. Better yet, ask your children to explain the advantages of recycling and the uses of recycled materials.

Take family outing to zoos, aquariums and museums and take the time to notice exhibits of extinct animals or endangered species. Talk about what that means.

Develop a family recycling or waste reduction project. You can reduce the amount of waste you contribute to land fills by being aware of product packaging, reusing bags or using canvas bags when you go to the store and using reusable instead of disposable containers. Ask your children for other ideas.

Encourage your children to experience nature first-hand. Go on walks together. Count the stars and planets. Hunt for fish in a stream, identify continue the important focus on our edible weeds or look for new birds in your neighborhood.

Read about and discuss local and national environmental issues. Let your children know why you are concerned about a particular issue and discuss what stand your family can and should take.

As a family, take personal responsibility for keeping your street free of trash and litter.

Contact your local electric and/or gas company for energy-saving tips and enlist your children's support in implementing some of them (such as turning off lights, closing doors and reducing laundry volume, thus using less hot water, etc.) by explaining the impact of savings on our environ-

T-Ball season to begin

To the editor, Well, people "It's that time of the year again! Look for your mitt and dust off those running shoes. Come out and "Play Ball!"

This year I've only got three of my own trying out, Rocky, Willyum and Dawn. I'll be busy, myself. Coaching T-ball again! I hope this season will be just as good as last. With the help of their team's coaches, my children got to make it to their games while I was working with my own team. Thank.

Little League had a fund raiser selling candy and pepperoni sticks last year and Rocky sold the most. He earned two tickets to the April 12th Trailblazer Game. I'm so proud and happy for him! But, I'd like to thank our community for your support and sponsoring little league in their efforts of raising money.

A few problems from other seasons I'd like to address: our biggest "problem" is there's no bathroom facilities available near our play field (sorry), no cleats are allowed for t-ball players but (on the other hand) sturdy running shoes are required. I'll only be responsible for my own team members (and my own children) at practice or games. Any extra brothers or sisters of the players need a baby-sitter to care for their well being and needs! I'll be able to provide drinking water, but my players need to bring their own sip cups or something to use to drink from.

for News From Indian Country In a time when parents receive media attention for abuses like abandoning their children to go on vacation in Mexico or chaining their children to a bedpost and leaving them home alone as a punishment, it is heartening to know there are parents who understand the value of honoring and loving our children, the future of our nations. Tucked in the small community of Siletz, Oregon, there lives a mother of five who has long been recog-nized in the state for her ongoing dedication to the well-being of chil-

In October 1993, Pat Darcy, of Northern Cheyenne and Ojibway descent, was unanimously recognized by the National Indian Education Association as the Native Parent of the Year. Unaware that she had even been nominated, Darcy stated she was "honored, but shocked. I never expected this."

She is the second award recipient from the region in the past 25 years, and is especially honored because the previous recipient was her mentor, Verbena Greene of Warm Springs, where Darcy was raised.

Until the 1970s, Oregon had no concept of "Indian education." Darcy initiated an Indian Parents group during this time "because we started realizing our kids were off the reservations and in urban areas. In the public school system, they were being left out worse than ever, and it prompted us to take some action."

This action resulted in her involvement in the original ad hoc committee that introduced and instituted the idea of Indian education throughout the state. She has been active in the Oregon Indian Education Association and various community activities, including work with the local women's shelter.

Currently planning yet another statewide OIEA conference slated for the spring, her ongoing dedication to young people and to education continues to make a valued contribution. Recently Darcy took time from her always busy days to spend a morning discussing her perceptions about parenting and young women and youth for a long time now. What do you see as the major trends and patterns of difficulty with our youth?

Darcy: I've been really rethinking that as of late. I think because I have been here and have been involved for so many years, that I've seen where kids didn't have anything. Kids would have to put together a buck for gas so they could all pile in a car to get somewhere and drag the streets.

Then I saw the tribes getting money and I saw drugs—a lot of drugs—and then I saw death because of drugs and alcohol. Most were car wrecks, solely because of drugs and alcohol. Many young people will never reach the age of forty. I read somewhere that most deaths of youth are directly related to drugs and alcohol. We didn't have that before. We had horses.

We went swimming. Put our money together for gas if we were lucky enough to be going somewhere in a car. We were more involved in the community. And we were able to have leaders come from that in our families"

Q: Why do you think so many outh

Kids "don't know how to follow rules...they end up hurting themselves and ... their aren't involved in the community in that way any-Darcy:

Because handed too many "things" and they got spoiled. They're not having to work for it. I'd like to see it go back to where the kids are more responsible, but I don't know if we'll ever see those days again because there's too much greed for money. Now it's expected, not earned.

Q: What about our youth who are disenfranchised and who are basically lost and confused and running amok with this wannabe gangster mentality in which their sense of power is based in violence? Why aren't they connected to the community? How are we losing them?

Darcy: I think it's because of parental involvement. You used to see alot of parents involved. You don't see that anymore. You see the kids being sent to something, but you don't see the parent accompany that child and the parent doesn't take responsibility. Parents are into alcohol and drugs and they set those kids aside and let them go without any direc-tion. These kids have no direction. They don't know how to follow rules and regulations from anybody. And they end up hurting themselves and hurting their families.

Q: Do you think alot of people in this country just don't know how to Darcy: I think so. I was taught by my grandmother and there were more family oriented things. My grandparents were a really big part of my life and my aunts and my cousins. We were all one big family.

And happy. Cooking, learning, doing things together. Learning traditional ways. It was wonderful. You don't have that anymore. You have parents giving kids money to get lost. To get out of their hair so the parents can party. It's come to that now. I've seen it and it's sad. All they want to be is little kids and what they're doing instead is trying to act like what they've seen on TV.

Tough guys. What they really want is to be loved and to feel loved. No o n e should put shame and doubt in them.

That's abuse.

Q: Do you think it's possible to reclaim our children from the street and the drugs and the violence and the confusion?

Darcy: That's a real tough question. I don't see alot of parents that know how to do that (long pause) or want to learn. Only if they've hit bottom, like with drugs and alcohol-then all of a sudden they want to learn how right now. But until that happens, we'll have these kids lost, generation after generation.

Q: What do you think about the ideas some have about parenting courses and mandating people to come in and get trained to be par-

Darcy: I have a friend who is directly involved with that. After listening to her, I've come to the understanding that it's like a bandaid approach, but you have to start somewhere. And these are our kids' lives at stake here.

Q: What skills do you think it takes to be a good parent? Darcy: I have no problems answering that. One. And that's to listen. Listen to your child. Don't tell them to shut up and go away.. And respect that little human being for of you.

Don't

shoosh them out the door. Let them speak to you. Q: What would you say to parents who are trying t learn to listen and their children tell them things they don't want to hear?

tell them to shut up and go

Darcy: I'd stuff it, as the adult, so you can talk to that child. I would talk about birth control and make sure there's no an unwanted pregnancy because they're too young to be par-I had to have talk like this with my kids. And you have to be up front with them, like, "Okay, you wanna smoke some pot or do some crank or crack or whatever," then you say, "I want to show you something." And you show them their counterparts in their age groups in state hospitals and treatment centers and de-tox They need to see that. That's exactly what needs to happen with lots of these kids. It takes time to d this. And parents have to be involved.

When I was raising my kids, I didn't work outside the home at all. Cause don't go for that. Not anymore. At first I thought I did with all this working business for women, but I don't go for that anymore. Q: What about the moms who have to work? The single mothers, and fathers, who are heading single parent households?

Darcy: That's a hard one. You would have to almost be a superparent" to be able to put you ob and your tiredness and your life aside-you have to put it aside t deal with your kids. These kids need attention. They have to come first.

Q: There are thousands f single sponsored by Melanie Mathews

parent female headed households in this country-more than ever before. There are so many absent fathers. What would you say to the men in our communities who have children that they don't keep in contact with and take responsibility for?

Darcy:....These are real kids. It's time to be responsible. Or else someday a knock will come on your door what they are. They're real and part to let you know your child is dead.

And exactly Number one rule in parenting: what "Listen to your children. Don't happens. The

kidsliving are worse than the chances for kids living with two parents who are involved with them.

Q: Earlier we talked about the extended families that some of us were fortunate to be raised with and how that can help us have a foundation and understanding about family. Now there is suspicion and distrust between us, and abuse happens more with people children know than with strangers. Do you have any suggestions about what communities can do to create safety and a sense of family for the children?

Darcy: The chidren must be surrounded by good people who love and care for that child. And those kids who have that, they know it. They're very respectful and when they become disrespectful, one of us will say something to those kids, and make sure those kids know we are saying, "We love you and that our hearts are connected as if the same blood runs through our veins as runs through yours.'

I've connected to alot of kids because the parents don't want to be parents. It involves getting to know one another more honestly as adults so we can communicated and trust one another more. You have to know who you can trust, especially with

Q: When you think of this work to which you have dedicated yourself, what comes into your heart and your Darcy: I never knew what unconditional love was. I knew what love was, but I didn't know what unconditional love was. I know what it is now. It means our hearts and our minds are connected, even when we disagree.

Every tribe has their problems and has their kids nobody wants. That's why I wish I had a big house that would cover all these acres and I would take them all in. I feel like I have this much love to share. Not the knowledge, mind you, just the love.

The longer we're out of the bottle and the drugs and the abuse, the happier we can be. We're going back to feeling our Indian spirit again. It still exists-you can open that up. It doesn't have to leave you because you're in prison or you're drinking and drugging. But when the drink and all the things leave you, well, you want to have your spirit-that's what's left. That makes sense, And the kids want to know about the spirit. Seek the counsel of others more experienced than you are. These young girls and boys, we need to help them to realize how unique and special they are. Honor yourself. Don't get into the bottle or the drugs or alot of the white ways. You will find peace if you do it the Indian way.
