Pacific Power offers Radio Help and Kid Care

Young people heading back to school this fall and motorists along the highways have a network of friends throughout the area-Pacific Power employees who drive vehicles displaying RADIO HELP and KID KARE decals.

The programs offer a safe haven for children who are frightened, or bothered by strangers; and communication for the public in general, from the scene of an accident, fire or other emergency or a less critical need-stranded motorist or person needing directions.

Pacific Power manager Bob McConnell said KID KARE was created by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the Pacific Power, for use throughout company service areas in California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana.

"The KID KARE decal on the side of most Pacific Power vehicles is a symbol to a child that the operator is a friend and provides a safe place to wait for help to arrive," McConnell explained.

RADIO HELP was initiated by Pacific in 1985, as a means of providing communications between the scene of an emergency and agencies responsible for providing such services.

Since inception, RADIO HELP has expanded to include more than 225 private companies, public agencies and other utilities throughout the western United States, all willing to offer communication in an emergency-be it major or minor. "Both KID KARE, for Pacific Power vehicles only, and RADIO HELP, for a growing number of organizations throughout the west, are symbols of a commitment to serve the public," McConnell point out.

"Healing Journey" theme of Canadian alcoholism conference

The people of Kahnawake and other First Nations have been preparing for more than a year to welcome some 1,000 representatives of tribes from across North America who are expected to attend a history-making gathering September 15 to 18 in Montreal.

The sixth annual conference of the National Association for Native American Children of Alcoholics (NANACOA) represents a milestone for the six-year-old organization as the first time its full membership will meet in Canada.

The theme for this year's conference, "The Healing Journey: Expanding Our Vision," was chosen to acknowledge the movement toward recovery and wellness among First Nations and Native people throughout North America.

Conference participants will be able to choose from among work-shops that address the effects of multigenerational alcoholism; men's and women's wellness issues; sexuality and sexual abuse; post-traumatic stress disorder; elders and the Healing Journey; alcoholism and rela-tionships; healing through storytelling, and other topics.

The conference site is the LeCentre Sheraton in Montreal. For information on registration, call the NANACOA office in Seattle at 206-467-7686 or 1-800-322-5601.

On Sunday, August 7, an article about the Deschutes Crossing Restaurant appeared in the travel section of the Oregonian.

According to owner-operator Susie Smith, business has been overwhelming, to say the least. People have been coming in from many different parts of the Northwest wanting to try out the Indian tacos and some of that wild huckelberry pie featured on the menu.

Buck and Susie have being operating the restaurant for the past eight years now and know that the article helped bring in the extra business, but a hearty thank you also goes out to the community of Warm Springs, friends, relatives, tribal and federal government employees who come in on a day-to-day basis. "We Couldn't have done it without their support," say the owners.

Buck and Susie would especially like to thank their staff. If it weren't for waitresses like Kim, Sara, Julia, Punky and Tonya greeting the customers with smiles and great service "we couldn't have done it. Plus, things would not run as smoothly in the kitchen if it weren't for cooks like Koo-Koo, Ron, Bill and Ralph cooking those great meals whether it be breakfast, lunch, or dinner.'

Buck and Susie are very proud of their staff and would like them to know they appreciate them very much.
