

Museum visitor donates artwork

Because of the uniqueness of its design, a Portland insurance company has presented The Museum At Warm Springs with a frame reproduction of the artist's rendering of The Museum.

JBL&K officials Jonathon Hart and Dennis Doherty were in Warm Springs last week to present the framed reproduction to Museum Director Michael Hammond.

Hart said he became enamored with the design two years ago on a company outing at Kah-Nee-Ta where he saw it on display. He believed the illustration was so outstanding that it should be framed and put on permanent display.

The illustration is done by artists Louis Gagnon for Stastny Architects and features the Museum emerging from the earth in a rimrock patter with the building exterior on top of the ground.

"I loved the drawing and wanted a copy of the illustration in my office," Hart said. He also believed a copy needed to be hanging in The Museum and that is why the company made the presentation.

Doherty said JBL&K likes to get involved in community events. "We try to give back to the community especially for worthy causes."

Hammond said, "It's very pleasing to know that visitors to The Museum are touched by their experience here. Hart was one of those visitors and he wanted to give the wonderful drawing back and we're very appreciative of that."

The framed reproduction features the three colors of the Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs in a geometric pattern around the drawing. The drawing will be hung in the hallway between the Museum staff offices and the library.

Over 200 tribal members attended the Job Fair at Kah-Nee-Ta Resort February 28. Information concerning employment at Kah-Nee-Ta, the gaming enterprise and gaming construction. Another Job Fair will be held Thursday, March 2 for non-tribal members.

Indian land ownership topic of consultation

The Bureau of Indian Affairs will present information concerning the proposed legislation to the Indian Land Consolidation Act at a consultation meeting in the Warm Springs Housing conference room beginning at 1 p.m. on Wednesday, March 8. The Warm Springs meeting is one of 11 such meetings in the Portland Area at which the overview concerning Indian heirship has been presented.

A growing problem has faced individual Indians, tribes and the BIA for many years, the fractionated ownership of allotted lands. The problem has now reached the point where the Department of the Interior's ability to administer allotted lands, probate Indian estates and maintain the IIM system can no longer keep up with the increasing number of fractional interests.

An attempt to address the problem was made by Congress in 1984 when it passed the Indian Land Consolidation Act. Part of that Act requires that when an individual owner dies, an interest amounting to two percent or less in a tract of land will "escheat" or automatically transfer to the tribe. In spite of this law, the number of such small interests owned by individual Indians has grown from 350,000 in 1984 to over 1.5 million in 1994.

Any proposal to solve the fractionated heirship problem must have two parts: 1) the consolidation of ownership and 2) the prevention, or substantial reduction, of further fractionation. The objectives can be met through a land-purchase program, and by placing limitations on who can inherit interests in allotted land.

For further information, be sure to attend the consultation meeting on March 8.

Students urge others to stay in school

by Saphronia Katchia

Eighteen year old Cecelia Rose Frank is a senior at Madras Senior High School. Her parents are Lillian Frank Cuevas and Eduardo Cuevas of Warm Springs. Delbert Frank, Sr. and the late Cecelia McKinley Frank are her grandparents. She has three brothers; Javier Gonzales who is 15, thirteen-year-old Hector Gonzales, and Leonardo Cuevas age 6. Her sisters are twenty-five-year-old Diane Felix, Janie Felix age 24, twenty-three-year-old Yolanda Felix,

Cecelia Frank

Marta Cuevas age eleven, Monica Cuevas who is nine and eight-year-old Socorro Cuevas. She is of the Warm Springs, Yakama descent.

Frank was involved with the Youth Commission on Children & Families with Diane Treadway last year. There they made suggestions to improve the community. She also worked with COBRA. She is currently involved in Senior Club Meetings, planning senior activities.

She enjoys reading, being a teen mother, taking care of her son Miguel Delberto Frank, who is now two and a half years old. Frank also writes in a journal when she feels the need to.

Civics with Darryl Smith, Accapella with James Burge, and Teen Parenting with Lisbet Hornung are her favorite classes. She also appreciates the support of her night school teacher Carrie Bodensteiner. Frank had to struggle a lot being a teen mother by making-up high school credits in order to be on track to graduate with her class. She feels she received a lot of help from many teachers and most likely could not have done it without them. She was presented with the Principal's Award her sophomore and junior years.

She feels a bit scared about this being her last year at MHS, and that she's probably going to miss it. And regrets not being involved with extracurricular activities such as dances due to being a teen-mother. When she leaves Madras High she will miss the support she has received from teachers and the regular schedule of school. She plans her career in working with distressed children. Frank did summer work at the Warm Springs Group Home in 1993-94 and she really enjoyed it. She is still looking into a college choice, most likely a community college.

Frank would like to comment to the remaining lower classmen, "Stay out of trouble—even in the hardest of times, stay in school." In five to ten years from now she sees herself having a job, probably married and working in a children's environment.

Seventeen-year-old Eli Spencer Smith is the son of Dawn and Darryl Smith of Warm Springs. His grandparents are Morris and Lois Jiminez of Salem, Oregon. He has one sister, Ardis who is a fourteen year old Freshman and Madras High School. Eli is of the Warm Springs, Klamath descent.

He enjoys taking care of his car. He plays football at MHS and has played since his freshman year. He was selected team captain this year. He has also played baseball since his freshman year and is participating this year. His favorite sport is Baseball, he feels that it is "a challenge and fun to play." He has received varsity letters.

His favorite class is Physics with Nick Keezle. His outlook of the past school years he feels he, "could have tried harder, and focused more on school (homework)." When asked about his feelings about this being his last year at MHS he commented, "Finally!" When he leaves Madras he will miss his friends and the sports activities. Eli would like to pursue a career in the engineering field. He plans on applying for the University of Washington, but if that doesn't work he will try Oregon State University. Eli would like to comment to the remaining lower classmen of MHS, "Stay in school, stay off the drugs and alcohol." In five to ten years from now Eli sees himself being an engineer and living in Beverly Hills."
