Strength comes from sobriety, not numbers

The following letter was submitted to Spilyay for reprinting by a "concerned mother, grandma and great-grandmother".
To the Editor,
 Should the spoken laws that governed a respectful, functional, sober nation be applied to a drinking, dysfunctional tribal people?
 Should we teach the children to respect their elders, even if it's the elders who make alcohol and child neglect a tradition? How many generations of alcoholics will it take before alcohol becomes a part of our tradition? Or is it already?
 When did the children stop being gifts from the creator and start being burdens? And how much more of a burden will they become when welfare goes the way of the buffalo?
 In the days of the braids and buffalo, old age didn't automatically ensure respect. Respect was given to a person because of their lifelong accumulation of knowledge, their generosity and courage, and above all, their wisdom that would help ensure the survival of the future generations.

Respect is an action that shows others how much they mean to you. It lets people know how vital they were and how important they still are.
 Why should we listen to these elders when they profess to know everything, yet they didn't have the courage to do anything when they were our age. Maybe because of addictions or other things they never earned the respect they now seek.
 Alcohol has taken so much from us, for so long. It's even hard to imagine a world without it. It's scary to hear about FAS/FAE babies born to mothers who didn't drink, but the grandmothers and great-grandmothers who did.
 When do we as a nation start to make these mothers accountable for this extreme case of child abuse?
 Where are all those promises that were made about taking care of the children? Are they all laying on the council chamber's floor, broken?
 What good are the laws that charge women who are pregnant and drink with child abuse, when they're not enforced? How do you justify a woman who has five children with FAS/FAE? I can't unless someone paid them good money. Hm?

 Banishment and not prison time would do more to get rid of bootleggers and pushers. If someone wants to hurt the people with these substances why should we allow them to live here?
 If someone is always getting arrested for liquor violations, why not banish them for a year? It's obvious they don't care about their families so why not give their families a break from them.
 Hard times call for hard core lessons. Maybe if enough of us promoted and supported sobriety we could get out youth back. And with them will come a sober future.
 A wise man said, "I would rather have 100 sober people in my tribe than a million drunk ones." Our strength comes from our sobriety and not in numbers.
 TL Standing Soldier Hisle, South Dakota
