Planning to rent an apartment? Tips offered

Planning to rent an apartment or house? If you are, it's a good idea to write out a list of questions to ask when you're shopping around. To get you started, here are some things you should know about leases, security deposits, and your rights as a renter.

What information should the lease include?

A lease is usually a written agreement between you and your landlord. The lease tells you how much your rent will be and for what period of time. It also tells you what services your landlord will provide, such as painting and maintenance. If this information isn't provided, ask your landlord to state on the lease how repairs and other maintenance concerns will be handled.

It's very important to read your lease carefully. If you don't, you may miss clauses that tell you when you can play your stereo, which door to use to take furniture in and out, and whether or not you can own a pet. Knowing this information up front can avoid confrontations with your landlord and your neighbors later on.

Keep in mind, though, that your lease isn't etched in stone and you may be able to negotiate changes before you sign. For example, a clause that relieves the landlord of all maintenance responsibilities is probably not in your favor and may end up costing you a lot of extra money. If you want this clause changed, ask about it. And, if the landlord agrees to change the lease, get it in writing before you sign.

Why should I pay a security deposit?

A security deposit is usually required to offset the landlord's cost of repairing any property damage caused by you, such as a soiled carpet or a hole in the wall. Before you sign the lease and move in, find out what your deposit covers and conditions for a refund. Also, inspect the property with the landlord and make note of all damages you see by writing them down and/or taking pictures. Ask to have "normal wear and tear" defined in the lease, along with any procedures such as carpet cleaning or fumigating that are charged to tenants when they leave.

If your landlord deducts for any damages when you move out, ask him for an itemized list of the damages he deducted, including the amount and the reason why. Compare his list to the list of damages you wrote down before you moved in. And if you see items you don't agree with, let your landlord know immediately. If you don't, you may lose your rights to contest the damages, and lose some or all of your deposit. Tenant-landlord relations are usually regulated by the local county government. Check your phone book under "Housing" if you need assistance.

What do I do if I feel that I've been discriminated against?

The Fair Housing Act makes it illegal for anyone to be denied housing on the basis of race, color, sex, religion, or national origin. It also protects pregnant women, people with mental and physical handicaps, and parents or people who have legal custody of minor children. However, there are some exceptions to this law. For example, some apartment buildings may be specifically designed for the elderly and may exclude families who have minor children. This is an acceptable practice.

When renting an apartment, you may suspect discrimination for several reasons, such as a building manager who refuses to show you an apartment after advertising that apartments are available.

If you feel that you're a victim of discrimination, there's help. If you have sound credit, are employed and agree to the terms of the lease, but you're denied housing, call 1-800-669-9777.

To get more information on housing, send your name and address to Consumer Information Center, Dept. 560B, Pueblo, Colorado 81009. When you write, you'll also receive a free copy of the Consumer Information Catalog. The Consumer Information Center of the U.S. General Services Administration revises and publishes the Catalog quarterly so you know it's up-to-date. You can get your free copy by sending your name and address to Consumer Information Catalog, Pueblo, Colorado 81009. Or, if you'd rather order the Catalog by phone, just call (719) 948-4000. This is a toll call, and regular long-distance rates apply.

Awareness walk planned

Apologies extended

To the editor,

This past summer I was observed by an off-duty (non member) tribal police officer. Early in the morning as I was on my way to work.

He reported a speeding auto proceeding toward Warm Springs from Madras. Upon arriving in Warm Springs I was stopped, arrested, and charged with my first and likely my last DUI.

Having been celebrating the birth of my cousins newborn earlier in the night is no excuse for my actions. There is no excuse under any circumstance.

I would like to extend my utmost apologies to the community and citizens of Warm Springs.

Sincerely, James Scott

To the editor,

To the people of Warm Springs I would like to take this time to apologize for being intoxicated on the rez, again I'm sorry.

Louis D. LeClaire

To the editor,

This apology is for all the drivers, families and friends who were traveling on July 9, 1995. I was driving while intoxicated and may have endangered your lives.

Marvin J. Ike, Sr.
