More and more people are being encouraged to come to Warm Springs and spend time and money at Indian Head Casino and Kah-Nee-Ta Resort. Some people travel many miles to enjoy the beautiful scenery they've heard so much about in this part of the state. Like many of us have done in the past, we've gone somewhere we've never been before and traveled different roads and seen different things, some good and some bad. When people come to visit Warm Springs enroute to the Casino via Highway 3 and 26, the first thing they'll notice is the not so pretty blackened acreage from the Simnasho Fire. The next thing they notice is all the debris, trash and garbage alongside the highway that people leave behind on their way to the dump. Instead of stopping and picking it up, it's left there for everyone to see. That type of scenery should not be on any reservation roads, let alone well-traveled ones.

Shots fired, two arrested

On October 3, shortly after 7 a.m. Warm Springs police responded to Upper Dry Creek residential area on a 911 call of someone discharging a fire arm.

One witness, who wished to remain anonymous, stated that shortly after 7 a.m. he heard what sounded like shots being fired near his home. He went outside to investigate and observed someone with a rifle and thought they were shooting at horses. The witness then went for a closer look near the fence in the back yard of his residence. As he got closer, he realized that the person doing the shooting had noticed him looking. The person then turned and opened fire toward him and toward his house where his family was. "I got down on my belly and crawled back to my house," stated the witness. "I could hear the bullets go past me and toward my house. My daughter, who had no idea what was going on, came outside looking confused, wondering what I was doing crawling on my knees. I yelled at her to get down because someone was shooting toward the house. The situation was rather scary. It brought back flashbacks of when I served in Viet-Nam, but this time I feared for my family inside our house. I finally got to the rear of my house reached in the back door and grabbed the phone and dialed 911. When Police responded, they found over 100 spent casings at the scene. Police also found four bullet holes at the Laura Crowe's trailer house where another witness stated that one of those bullets that hit the trailer missed his head by inches while he laid on his bed. Police also found that four vehicles, three pickup trucks and a sedan, had also been sprayed by gun fire.

Police have confiscated two 22 rifles and have two male suspects in custody at the Warm Springs jail. The case is still under investigation and no names have been released at the time. "We're just glad no one got shot or hurt during the whole thing," said a responding officer.

Museum presented award at ATNI symposium

The Museum At Warm Springs received the Award of Excellence from the Affiliated Tribes of Northwest Indian Friday at ATNI's annual tourism symposium, held at Kah-Nee-Ta Resort September 3-6. More than 170 people attended the four-day event at the Resort.

ATNI's highest award was given to 10 organizations for their work combining educational tourism, cultural preservation and community service. ATNI is a consortium of 54 tribes in a five-state region including southeast Alaska, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, western Montana and northern California. Accepting the award on behalf of the Confederated Tribes was Bernice Mitchell, a founding member of the museum's board of directors.

After 30 years of planning and raising thousands of dollars to build the museum and collect items for its archives, Warm Springs tribal elders and community worked for three years with architects Don Stastny and Bryan Burke, and exhibit designer Craig Karger, of "Formations," to create a building and exhibits which would be a monument to the land, the ancestors and the contemporary people of Warm springs. museum's entrance. Thick fir columns support the ceiling. The roofline echoes the form of a tule mat dwelling, a plank, house and travois; and exterior brick walls are set in a traditional basketweave design. Programming and exhibits at the Museum honor both the past, and life in the community today. "Living Traditions" presentations keep traditional arts alive. "For their vision, commitment, and leadership in architectural design, we are honored to present this Award of Excellence to the Warm Springs community and to The Museum At Warm Springs," said Gail Chehak, ATNI tourism director.

Other 1996 award winners are The People's Center, of the Flathead Reservation in western Montana for their outstanding educational tours. The Confederated Tribes of the Siletz Indian Reservation for their cultural heritage program; and the Nooksack Tribe's stream restoration project, in Deming, Washington. Jones & Jones, a Seattle architectural firm with Native American Johnpaul Jones as one of the principals, won an architectural award for the Longhouse project on the Evergreen State College campus in Olympia. The Gaming Tribes of Oregon were recognized for their important advertising campaign informing the public about the role of Indian gaming in the Northwest. Goldbelt, Incorporated, Sealaska Heritage Foundation, Saxman Village and Taquan Air, all of southeast Alaska, were also honored.

For more information about these and other cultural programs offered to the public by Indian tribes of the Pacific Northwest, ask your local bookstore for "Native People of the Northwest, A Traveler's Guide to Land, Art and Culture", co-authored by Jan Halliday, Gail Chehak and ATNI, published by Sasquatch Books. The book is also for sale at The Museum Gift Shop for $16.95.
