problems in different ways. A man tends to be direct—line up all his options, select one, then proceed. Women can be direct, too, but they may also choose a less obvious path.

For example, when one young mother and her family vacationed in Florida, their hotel ran out of beach umbrellas. The husband lodged a complaint with the management and declared that the family should stay off the beach until more umbrellas arrived. But the wife simply constructed a temporary shelter from pieces of driftwood and beach towels. For the man, the problem wouldn't be solved until the hotel came through. For the woman, the problem was solved when she and her children were able to enjoy the beach.

What women really want is for men to respect, rather than deride, the special ways they have of analyzing problems. When men struggle with a problem, they stay right with it, believing that's the only way to solve it, but often getting more and more upset. Women are more likely to simply let problems solve themselves—for example, by giving a child more time to adjust to a new teacher, rather than insisting on an immediate classroom change.

7. Sometimes, a woman has to be alone. Men are often more uncomfortable than women about being alone and tend to get bored more easily. Some men want to control their wives and they get anxious when their wives are off on their own, beyond reach.

Women need "down time"—to shop, read, recharge batteries—and a man shouldn't feel hurt if his spouse doesn't want to spend every free minute with him. Most people don't appreciate how important solitude can be.

Men need to understand that when a woman takes time to be alone she's expressing a need to be autonomous, not a lack of love, and she's making herself a better companion in the bargain.

8. Romance begins in the kitchen. It's hard for a woman to feel like a maid one moment and then turn around and feel sexy the next. Experts suggest that, for women, sharing chores is more important than good sex in maintaining a healthy marital relationship.

In fact, without sharing, there's not likely to be much sex at all. After a hard day at work, and taking care of the kids, and then handling most of the chores, a woman is stressed out. Elevated stress lowers the body's production of testosterone, a sex hormone produced in both men and women, and thus decreases a woman's sex drive.

Do husbands increase the amount of housework they do when wives go to work? A six-year study of more than 1,000 families indicated that husbands do increase their participation in housework—by 18 minutes a week.

Some men simply don't understand how important a sense of equity can be to the stirrings of romance. A Harris poll shows that women have 25 percent less leisure time than men do. Any woman who slaves away all day, in or out of the house, is going to be exhausted and she's going to feel exploited, not candidate for an active sex partner.

A woman's sexual satisfaction is affected by every aspect of the relationship; for a truly happy relationship, intimacy in the kitchen is as important as intimacy in the bedroom. A lack of togetherness in one place can't always be made up in another.

9. A woman wants to be friends with her husband. Few women relish being a mother, secretary or general picker-upper for their husbands. Even a bride who professes delight with her groom's "boyishness" will tire of being the only adult in the family if her husband doesn't grow up soon.

A woman wants the man in her life to be a true equal, someone who respects her strengths, treats her weaknesses with kindness, and expects her to do the same for him. In short, she wants a friend, a lover and a partner who understands her.

Apologies given

To Whom It May Concern:

I, Leminnie Smith, am extending an apology to any and all involved of an incident occurring in March out at the Wolf Point area in March 1996. To Steven Stewart & Ian Toht; to the officers; and to the community as a whole—I am sorry.

Leminnie Smith

I would like to apologize to the community of Warm Springs for operating a vehicle while under the influence of alcohol.

Ken Florez

To the community of Warm Springs,

I would like to apologize for my carelessness when I go Driving Under the Influence of Intoxicants in the past.

From,
Roberta "Bird B." Castro

Appreciation given to community

To the community,

On behalf of the Medina family, (Kim Medina, Terri Philpott, Phoebe LaRose and Thomas Medina) we would like to take the time to express our gratitude to all the tribal members who voted for us. Because of your yes votes, you made it possible for us to get enrolled. We would also like to thank all of our family and friends who stood by us all these years and made us strong. This has been our home and this is where we will always live, among our family and our people. Again thank you all for your support
