SEATTLE (AP)—Deregulation of a federal Indian housing program has produced mansions for tribal leaders and their friends and relatives, The Seattle Times reported.

Meanwhile, low-income reservation residents who were supposed to benefit from the Department of Housing and Urban Development program, called Mutual Help, face years on waiting lists.

In an article published Sunday, the Times examined $3 billion in spending since regulations were eased under former HUD Secretary Jack Kemp in 1992, a move expanded by his successor, Henry Cisneros.

Informed of the findings before publication, Cisneros ordered an investigation last week, a HUD spokesman said Friday.

"I don't deny you have found problems and issues," Michael Janis, HUD's second-ranking public housing official, said before the probe was announced.

The Mutual Help program provides federal funds to tribal authorities to finance residential construction. The program is kept going by monthly payments from residents, typically 15 percent of household income; more than 50,000 houses were built through Mutual Help in the last three decades.

But HUD adopted a "new flexibility" four years ago, eliminating the strict standards and close scrutiny once applied to the homes.

Limits on the size and amenities of an individual house were dropped in favor of an average cost per home within a development, The Times reported. That meant a tribe could build a house of any size, so long as enough cheaper housing was included to pull the average within bounds.

On the Tulalip reservation north of Seattle, it took $2.5 million to build 18 houses, The Times found. One 5,296-square-foot building was owned by Patti Gobin, executive director of the tribal housing authority, and her husband, Michael Alva, the agency's contracting officer. The couple's combined annual income is own behalf. It is important that you attempt to resolve this issue, in order to prevent further action against you in a State Court. If you fail to appear at the scheduled time, the presiding judge may issue a warrant for your arrest and require you to post ball to guarantee your appearance.

Dated this 22nd day of November, 1996. $92,319 five times the average for program participants.

Other findings: At the Pleasant Point reservation near Perry, Maine, a HUD-subsidized 3,000-square-foot mansion with an ocean view is shared by tribal housing head Pamela Francis and her husband, who supervised housing agency construction crews. They earn a combined $75,000. More than 100 other Passamaquoddy tribal members are on a waiting list for subsidized homes.

In Red Rock, Okla., Otoe-Missouria families who had been promised 20 HUD-financed houses learned that the brick ranch homes would go instead to tribal housing officials and their friends and relatives. One family has sued.

The Mashantucket Pequot tribe. which has no low-income families and operates a casino that reportedly clears $1 million a day on the slot machines alone, is completing work on the last of 15 large homes under a $1.5 million grant at Ledyard, Conn.

Near Coos Bay, Ore., a criminal investigation is under way into claims that Bruce Anderson, a one-sixteenth Indian who heads the Coquille tribal housing authority, used HUD funds for business ventures
