

E Coosh EEWA: The way it is

SPILYAY SPEAKS

I T G O

"That big Buck That Got Away" Yep! there will be plenty of hot stories why the hunter didn't get his buck now that the hunting season is in full swing for this year. It will be the biggest buck in the country. Excuses, excuses, why the hunter was the unlucky one this year.

Sometimes "Buck Fever" is the real problem. Many hunters will never admit they got Buck Fever while on the hunting trip. It happened to all hunters at one time or the other. It gives a guy a weird feeling to get Buck Fever.

There was this one guy who got Buck Fever. Could have been me or anyone for that matter. Well anyway he jumps this real big buck out of the bushes and as it lopped over the hill he was standing there ejecting his shells with out firing a shot, and after the buck gets out of sight he realizes what he had done. His friends were wondering why he wasn't shooting at the buck and he couldn't find any excuse with out admitting he got buck fever. Just the size of some of those bucks could make anyone get buck fever. Well I guess I should admit that it was me that got buck fever when I saw that big buck come pouncing out of those bushes. It is just like anything else, like they say if you want the rainbow, you've got to put up with the rain.

Each year a day before the hunting season opens the traffic from the Portland area becomes real heavy, almost bumper to bumper trying to get to that favorite spot before the next guy.

In the past I used to think that it was safer to pack a bag and head to the city for the week-end while the weekend woodsmen are on the loose, out there trying to get their buck. Afraid I might get shot by one of them.

Yep! that was for safety's sake, but now days it's not very safe anywhere, from all the drive by shootings in the NE section of Portland, makes a person if it is safe to go there anymore.

Well any way the hunting season is in full swing as it is each year where the woods will be buzzing with those weekend outdoor woodsmen. Each year there seems to be some that don't return because of heart attacks or being accidentally shot by another hunter. Just once there should be an accident free season or no one to get a heart attack while hunting.

Don't know if they are out of shape and exerting themselves climbing those hills, or the excitement of seeing that big buck. Guy's used to tell stories of hunters who didn't get his buck but he said he had a couple of sound shots. That he heard sounds in the bushes and shot in there with out checking if may be another hunter of a deer.

There are guys that save all year just for that fling over the week-end in the woods hunting. And there are some who just want to spend a week in the woods away from the run of the city and just have a ball along with the other guys hamming it up. For the real woodsmen who knows where and how to get that buck usually plans on how to preserve it for the coming year, by storing it in a freezer for future use.

The reports are that there should be a good supply of deer for the hunters this year. Around here in WS the deer are getting scarce from all the hunters that go out all the time. Hardly see any deer along the road sides as it was in the past. With all the 4X4's, the hunters don't do any walking anymore. It's like a drive in hunting trip. There don't look like there is any fun in that kind of hunting.

Yep! They say in the olden days they used to fan out and cover the country side on foot. Made it much more of a hunting trip, rather than driving up and shooting the buck. There's no fun in that. Well now days they have to have something to quinch the thirst is perhaps the reason of the drive up hunting trips. AAAH-NAH-CHI-TOON!!!

TOE NESS

As his luck goes, This Not-So-Bright guy went on his first hunting trip and he was killed by his prey. He was following some tracks when all of a sudden the train came along and hit hi., YIKES

SS SS SS

There were these two Not-So-Bright guys who went hunting and after a bit they lost their way. "Not to worry," one of them said. "When you're lost, all you have to do is shoot three times in the air. They did so and waited, and hour later they did it again, and still no one came. Finally they tried a third time. "This better work this time," one said to the other. Because these are our last three arrows." YIKES

Concerned of misuse

To the editor,

I felt compelled to write my observations to you, someone might see themselves, I hope. A very handicapped elderly person is crowded out of the only handicapped space at the post office by a young, healthy person who has been parking in the only space available for the handicapped while she visited in the post office. Of course she has a handicapped sticker but it is for her child or member of her family. When is this abuse going to stop? Where is the respect you were supposedly taught? Especially for the truly handicapped. I am concerned. Are you suppose to drive around with your handicapped card hanging on the mirror? I don't think so.

Ten rules for understanding others & coping

submitted by Guy Wallulatum
Ten Rules for Understanding Others

The way other people with whom one comes in contact react to him or her, has a very definite influence upon his or her behavior. If people are rude and abusive to a person, the person is likely to become fearful and insecure and to develop deep-seated hatred for others.

If one is treated with kindness, he or she is likely to be sure and to like people. Often, one tends to dislike other people simply because he or she thinks others dislike him or her.

The person who takes the time and makes the effort to understand others is likely to find out the below-the-surface meaning of his or her behavior. This understanding makes one adopt a more confident and positive attitude toward people with whom he or she comes into contact.

These ten rules will help you to understand yourself and others and will result in making both you and the other person happier in each other's company:

1. Tolerate the weaknesses of other people. Do not become upset simply because other people are different from you and want to do things in a different manner. Even a temperamental, mean and abusive person responds favorably to love-just as you do. So, respect their differences and weaknesses just as you would want them to do yours.
2. Search for the positive rather than the negative in others. Learn to look for the good in others and you are likely to find what you are looking for. When one seeks to find negative traits, he is likely to find them and to even interpret the good as bad.

3. Be sincere in your desire to understand people. There are many times when a person who is envious, angry, and troubled, automatically criticizes everyone with whom he or she comes in contact with. He dislikes people because he thinks that they are better than himself.

4. Accept the challenge of liking the bad in people. Almost anyone can enjoy understanding the happy, stable person. However the challenge comes in enjoying and understanding the rude, unstable, abusive person. This understanding indicates disciplined maturity. (compassion)

5. No one is perfect, so don't expect them to be. Every person has flaws of some kind, even you and me. Avoid expecting people to be perfect. Avoid becoming upset when people fail to live up to high expectations. Do you always live up to the expectations of others. (NO, set obtainable goals; short termed and long ranged)

6. Dislike the things, don't dislike the person. Avoid falling into the trap of disliking a person merely because that person disagrees with you. Dislike his or her ideals or his or her arguments, not him or her. It is alright to hate evil, abusiveness, lying, distrust, and greed, but have sympathy for the unfortunate person who is controlled by them. (Learn to live with)

7. Treat the unkind with kindness. Determine to assert yourself, but be kind in your assertiveness. Decide that the more unkind a person is to you, the kinder you will be to that person. The unkind person seeks your love and acceptance. Give them to him or her and watch him or her beam with approval and kindness.

8. Do not let failure frustrate you. You have more successes than failures in your life, so never be deterred from seeking your objective. The greatest attribute of the successful person is consistent determination to never stop trying to succeed.

9. Do not be your own worst enemy. Do not let your emotions dictate your actions. Make decisions only when you have complete control of your emotions. A decision made while you are angry is a bad decision.

10. Be sincere in wanting to improve. Be honest about acknowledging the fact that you have shortcomings. Once you recognize your shortcomings you can proceed with your enormous energy to eliminate them. This realization is the first step toward self-improvement and happiness.

These simple, easy-to-follow steps will help you to understand yourself by understanding others. Success and happiness will be your reward.
