Peace and Dignity runners arrive in Warm Springs July 7

Andrew Smith and some children of the Boys and Girls Club ran from the Sunnyside turn off with the Staff Carriers as they came in from Wamic. There was approximately 40 runners total. They will arrive at their destination in October.

Each runner came at their own pace. This runner looked pretty worn out.

Two ladies not to far behind the staff carriers.

Peace and Dignity is a Native American spiritual run that was done in 1992 and 1996 and is scheduled again in 2000. South American runners started March 18 at Tierra del Fuego Argentina and North American runners started in Chickaloon, Alaska on May 1, 2000. In October the runners will meet at ancient temples in Teotihuacan near Mexico City, Mexico.

As in the past, Peace and Dignity Journeys is not sponsored and has very little money. Peace and Dignity invites local people to join in the run as it passes and to participate in ceremonies that begin and end each day of the run. Non-runners are needed to donate time, help for planning overnight stops, organizing pot lucks, prayers and support.

Following is the schedule that was followed while passing through Oregon.

Peace and Dignity Journeys is a Native American human rights alliance based in Tempe, Arizona whose primary venture is to encourage the notion among indigenous societies that absolute sovereignty is a realistic attainable goal. Its governing council is Native American and its international membership is predominately Native American although it solicits the active participation of Asian, African and European Americans who strongly support its philosophy and activities. The principle means by which it pursues its aims is by conducting spiritual runs of extreme distances comprised chiefly of native runners of both sexes bearing staffs and other culturally significant objects through regions inhabited mainly by native people. It is in the social and intellectual atmosphere surrounding such runs that actions and strategies pertinent to the attainment of cultural and political autonomy are forged. Because Peace and Dignity views itself solely as an instrument of indigenous Americans engage in a struggle for self-determination and regeneration. The runs it sponsors are designed to include their widest possible participation in a manner most consistent with regional norms.
