How did trees get their names?

Is the Douglas-fir a true fir tree? Is the western larch an evergreen? And where in the heck do "hem-firs" grow?

Don't fret if you can't answer these questions. You'll be able to after you read a publication from the Oregon State University Extension Service.

From the mountain-mahoganies of eastern Oregon to the four types of false cedars in western Oregon, "Understanding Names of Oregon Trees" offers tidbits of information about the origins and names of the state's tallest plants.

Examples:
The Douglas-fir is not among Oregon's six native true firs because, to put it in plain language, its cones don't have the classic fir shape. The wood products industry often calls the wood of young Douglas firs red fir and the wood of older trees yellow fir. The Japanese call Douglas fir wood Oregon pine.

The western larch (tamarack) tree of northeastern and central Oregon is a conifer, a type of tree commonly called an evergreen. But the larch is not evergreen. It's the only conifer in the state that sheds its needles every year.

If you're having trouble spotting the "hem-firs" you hear builders talk about it's because there is no such tree. Hem-fir is a grouping of woods. The building industry uses the name to refer to species with similar properties, in this case those of firs and hemlocks. The six trees in the hem-fir grouping are western hemlock, California red fir, grand fir, noble fir, Pacific silver fir and white fir.

"It's little wonder that people are confused by tree names," said Scott Leavengood, the OSU Extension wood products agent in Klamath County who wrote "Understanding Names of Oregon Trees." Foresters and lay people often name a tree based on its physical appearance, the wood products industry may call the tree another name based on the characteristics of the wood, and botanists name a tree based on its anatomical characteristics and evolutionary relationship with other trees.

"Understanding Names of Oregon Trees" (EC 1502) is available by mail for $1.50 per copy. Send your request along with check or money order payable to OSU to: Publication Orders, Extension and Station Communications, OSU, 422 Kerr Administration, Corvallis, OR 97331-2119.

A more detailed publication titled "Trees to Know in Oregon," EC 1450, is also available by mail for $5 per copy.

Extension: Tight money tips

Is your money situation a little tight these days? Are you wondering how you can "make ends meet"?

Over the past few months, I presented a series of money management classes for adults at the Small Business Center and for Mutual Home Ownership. Part of the lessons involved identifying ways to increase income, decrease expenses and identify other resources to help stretch dollars. Folks in the class shared some really great ideas or suggestions on how they have been able to ease their financial stress that I have outlined below. Take a minute or two and see if there is an idea that might work for you. What do you have to lose except some of your debt?

- Ways to Increase income
- Babysit
  - Cut wood
  - Collect on child support
  - Host yard/bake sale
  - Use mechanical skills on someone else's vehicle
  - Recycle (cans)
  - Garden/compost
  - Sell crafts (beadwork/art-work/wood/ canned or dried foods/baked goods)
  - Trade goods or services (chop wood/ clothing/food / services/furniture)

- Secure a job - seasonal or part time
- Start a business (i.e. - typing/cleaning/babysitting /tutoring/computer),
- Work overtime
- Open a savings account and earn interest
- Contribute to a pretax investment (IRA)
- Breed/sell livestock
- Rent home/room
- Comparison shop at different stores
- Use coupons/discounts
- Carpool
- Consign "stuff"

Ways to Reduce Expenses

- Stop buying things that are not needed
- Purchase generic items instead of name brand
- Reduce recreational spending
- Conserve energy (low wattage and/or lights out)
- Resources other than Money
- Preserve foods (i.e. - canning/drying)
- Use hunting as a food source
- Recycle
- Do-it-yourself mechanical

repairs

- Garden/compost
- Offer home daycare
- Carpool/exercise by walking home
- Use coupons/discounts
- Volunteer in exchange for free admission at events
- Trade/exchange services for good (i.e. - wood/food/clothing/furniture)
- Shop around
- Attend free events
- Use yarn to make Afghans for gifts
- Donate service for community to repair computers
- Repair carpet shampooer instead of buying a new one and sell service to others
- Conserve electricity at home
- Make more cards to give as gifts
- Carpool and exercise by walking home
- Buy apples and learn how to and bake apple pie
- Research business plans
- Buy a used home
- Complete regular maintenance at home
- Plan food budget/ share meal expenses

Housing reminds residents to reduce the risk of fires

The Housing Department is reminding all tenants and homebuyers that it's time to pull up weeds and debris around dwelling units to reduce the risk of fire. The current drought has raised concerns over potential fire danger during the summer months, so the department has developed a list of steps that should be taken to reduce the pending threat:

1. Define your defensible space by creating a buffer zone around the dwelling. The buffer should be at least 30 feet wide and be free of combustible material. The buffers will help to reduce fire intensity and it also gives firefighters an area to work in.
2. Remove or prune trees around the home.
3. Cut grass and weeds regularly.
4. Relocate woodpiles and leftover building materials away from the dwelling.

5. Keep roof and yard free of debris.

6. Place easy-to-read signs with address numbers that identify the home in a location visible from primary access routes so firefighters can find the residence in case of an emergency.

7. Evaluate your roof. Roofs are the most vulnerable part of a house during a wildfire. Shake roofs are extremely vulnerable and should be considered for treatment or replacement.

8. If a wildfire strikes, residents should monitor local radio and television stations for fire reports and evacuation procedures. An emergency checklist should be maintained in a handy location. Residents should be prepared to evacuate if their neighborhood is threatened.
