

Video details work of Salmon Corps volunteers

Youths improve fish habitat while preparing for college

Louis Hellon of the Warm Springs Salmon Corps group recently narrated a video program of the Salmon Corps that will be shown at the grand opening of Matthew Henson Earth Conservation Exhibition Center, in Washington, D.C.

Among the guests at the grand opening event will be Pres. George W. Bush, who will screen the video to learn more about the Salmon Corps program. The video is about five minutes long, and details the work that the Salmon Corps members do on the reservation, through the region, in addition to the work the Earth Conservation Corps carries out on a national level.

Hellon provided narration, explaining the kinds of projects that Salmon Corps works on, and how the program has been a help to himself and other members. Through Salmon Corps, young people receive money for college, plus college credits in the area of natural resource management.

They attend seminars on job careers, and how to succeed at college. The members also receive a minimal stipend payment, to cover living expenses during the course of the Salmon Corps program.

To complete the program, a person also has to have a high school diploma or a GED. When necessary, Salmon Corps provides guidance for a person in acquiring a GED, said

Roland Kalama, Jr., director of Warm Springs Salmon Corps.

In the Northwest region, Salmon Corps groups are active in the communities of Warm Springs, Yakama, Umatilla, Shoshone Bannock, North Sound and Nez Perce. An urban Corps group is based in Portland.

On the reservations, the Salmon Corps members work in the field, restoring fish habitat. In Portland, they work more on community service type projects.

On the Warm Springs Reservation, Salmon Corps has constructed and repaired many miles of fencing in rangeland areas. The fencing is designed to keep livestock away from the streams, so that vegetation can grow up along the banks.

This keeps the water cool, creating a healthier fish habitat. The 15 Salmon Corps members in Warm Springs work hard, in difficult terrain and in the heat of the afternoon sun, said Kalama. They work Monday through Friday, and sometimes on weekends.

The Salmon Corps workers have to complete 1,700 hours of work within an 11-month period. Often, the members finish early, within nine months. At the completion of the program, they have money for college plus the 17 credits.

The goal is to recruit into Salmon Corps youths who are at-risk, Kalama said. In a way, the members are working at restoring fish habitat, while also working at restoring their own lives, he said.

The best part of directing the program, Kalama said, "Is seeing the crew come together as a team, and seeing the young people have the heart to finish the job."

Salmon Corps began in Warm Springs seven years ago.

The program is associated with Eagle Corps, which exists in communities on the East Coast.

Both groups are branches of AmeriCorps, which provides some of the funding for Salmon Corps.

Other funding comes from the Tribes, and from private businesses and foundations.
