Delbert Frank Sr. ...

Another issue he worked on was approving the means to recover the McQuinn Strip. "He was there during very important times for the tribes," said Calica.

Senior U.S. District Judge Owen Panner, a friend of Mr. Frank, said in a recent letter, "During the many years when difficult decisions were being made by the tribes, Delbert and Olney Patt Sr. were towers of strength."

Mr. Frank was one of three brothers who provided unselfish leadership to the Confederated Tribes for over half a century.

Delbert and his brother Olney Patt Sr. served on Tribal Council at various times from the 1950s through the late 1980s. Their younger brother Jacob served from the 1970s into the mid 1990s.

Delbert was first elected to Tribal Council in May 1956, and served on ten Tribal Councils for a total of 30 years. He was elected Tribal Council Chairman in 1980. He also served as president of the Affiliated Tribes of Northwest Indians.

During the 1960s he worked on developing the Confederated Tribes' first comprehensive long-range planning document.

Through this work he came to know early-on the ideas and thoughts of people regarding the long-term plans of the Confederated Tribes. Mr. Frank was a strong leader because he advocated the views of the people he represented.

He became a leader of national prominence. "He almost single-handedly turned the tide when working with the Fish and Wildlife Federation, National Association of County Judges and the Commission of State Legislators," said Rudy Clements.

Mr. Frank had expertise in fisheries issues, but his knowledge went beyond natural resources into culture and heritage, and the history of many tribes of the Northwest, among other subjects.

"Delbert Frank Sr. was an important member of the Northwest Portland Area Indian Health Board in its first decade," said Julia A Davis, current board member.

Mr. Frank worked on the incorporation of the Northwest Portland Area Indian Health Board in 1978, "an organization that remains a strong advocate of Indian health," Davis said.

He also worked on the Indian Health Care Improvement Act, which remains the foundation of Indian health programs.

"As President of the Affiliated Tribes of Northwest Indians, Delbert Frank Sr. kept health care issues in the front of the Northwest tribal leaders," Davis said.

The Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs lost a long and trusted leader with the passing of Delbert Frank Sr.

Delbert Frank Sr.

Delbert Frank Sr. passed away Saturday, Sept. 8, at Hi Lookie Lodge. He was 77.

Mr. Frank, whose Indian name is "wun-ow-watchee," was born to parents Charley and Myrtle (Yahtin) Frank at Log Springs on Sept. 9, 1923. He was a veteran of World War II.

He was married to Velma (Peters) Frank in Stevenson, Washington. She preceded him in death.

Earlier, Mr. Frank was married to Ceelia McKinley, who also preceded him in death.

Mr. Frank was a lifetime resident of Warm Springs, who was a tribal representative for many years. He was on the committee for the National Congress of American Indians, as well as the Northwest Indian Fish Commission for the Northwest Tribes. He served 30 years on Tribal Council. He enjoyed hunting and fishing.

He is survived by seven siblings, 10 children, more than 40 grandchildren, more than 60 great grandchildren, and four great great grandchildren.

He is survived by sisters Lydia Frank and Margaret Suppah.

He is survived by brothers Olney Patt Sr., Jacob Frank and Elvis Frank.

Washut services were held for Delbert Frank Sr. on Monday, Sept. 10, at the Hi Lookie Lodge, and the dressing was the following day at the Simnasho Longhouse. Burial was at sunrise on Wednesday, Sept. 12, with traditional and military services at the Simnasho Cemetery.

Officiating was Wilford Yallup and Jimmy Selam.

A number of prominent Indian and non-Indian leaders were in attendance, including former Gov. Vic Atiyeh, who was one of the honorary pallbearers.
