College sets orientations

Central Oregon Community College is offering two sessions to help incoming students prepare for winter term.

A placement test and "Next Steps" orientation program will be offered at 5:30 p.m. Nov. 5 on the Bend campus. There will also be a session at 2 p.m. Nov. 6 in Redmond.

The two-hour ASSET placement test measures skills in reading, writing and math and is used to determine the correct level of course work. It is required for students who intend to pursue a college degree or certificate, and for those planning to enroll in math, writing, or other courses requiring placement scores.

There is no charge for these services, but reservations are required. Contact the COCC Counseling office at 383-7515.

ECE closure ...

The interviews helped in concluding that the cause of the incident had been the petroleum product used during maintenance of the fan motor, said Martinez.

The environmental testing at ECE shows that the building has excellent air quality, said Julie Quaid, ECE director.

There is no reason to think that the problem last week would recur, as maintenance scheduling would be adjusted to avoid a recurrence, said Quaid.

Chief Martinez said, "The Early Childhood Education facility has been thoroughly tested and determined to be safe."

As a precautionary measure, the ECE building will have 16 carbon monoxide monitors installed in pod F, with an additional 24 installed by the end of the month, totaling 40 monitors in the ECE building.

In responding to this incident, the overriding concern was the safety and health of ECE staff and the children, said Willy Fuentes, chief operations officer.

The temporary closure of the building, he said, was necessary toward achieving this end. The decision to reopen was made only after Chief Martinez, incident commander, was assured that no potential health problems were present at the ECE building, said Fuentes.

Tribes act on fish pact

It has been two weeks since the Bonneville Power Administration entered into a pact with Warm Springs and three other tribes to preserve and enhance the Columbia River fishery.

Since then a technical staff consisting of members of the four Tribes has met to formulate project recommendations and determine procedures for gathering the input of other parties involved in fishery use and management.

At the same time the Oregon Fish and Wildlife Commission continues to be dismayed about the BPA's "lack of coordination with state agencies in developing the bilateral agreement with the Indians."

Tribe plans juvenile criminal justice program

The need has existed for a long time but the reality of a Juvenile Criminal Justice Program for Warm Springs is just now taking form. With the arrival of funding, a program director and a juvenile court judge, work has begun on the development of the program and the facility to house it.

A total of $200,000, including a $150,000 grant from the LEAA (Law Enforcement Assistance Administration) and $50,000 from the Tribe, is available for construction of a juvenile justice facility. Such a building would house the Juvenile Court, a Juvenile Detention Home and the personnel directly involved in the program.

A tentative site by the jail is being considered and negotiations have begun with an Indian architect from Oklahoma. It is expected that a construction contract will be awarded by the summer of 1977 and the facility may be completed by late 1977.

Kah-Nee-Ta enjoys three month profit

For the first time in the history of Kah-Nee-Ta Resort, management is pleased to report a net profit for the months of June, July and August 1976, and a gross operating profit for the month of September.

Room occupancies were higher than forecast at both the lodge and the village for those months. According to Ed Manion, enterprise manager, room occupancy during August was the highest on record -- the highest in the history of Kah-Nee-Ta Resort.

This is the first time Kah-Nee-Ta has enjoyed a profit. In addition, records indicate that volume is picking up earlier in the year and lasting until later in the year.

Ambulance program needs help

How many people would know what to do if a loved one suffered a heart attack or a friend was badly injured in an automobile accident? When faced with situation such as these, most of us feel utterly helpless and are dependent upon the aid and knowledge of someone who has the training to handle such emergencies.

We rely on ambulance personnel to get there quickly and we expect those manning the ambulance to know how to administer oxygen, stop bleeding, and be able to do whatever is necessary to keep our family member or friend alive and stable en route to the hospital or clinic.

We expect all this, at yet at Warm Springs Jeff Sanders, tribal police chief, believes that for a community of this size, ambulance service is far below what is considered normal. He is asking for help in building up the ambulance program in order to give more service to the community. Presently, the only people manning the ambulance are members of the police force, and that's not enough, according to Sanders.

"We need volunteers from the community (men or women) who would be willing to take the training required to ride in the back of the ambulance," said Sanders.
