

Tribal dancer featured on PBS program

Show may air again in Feb.

Fancy shawl dancer Donnetta Squiemphen, Indian name Backward Dancing Woman, appeared last year on the PBS Television special Music From a Painted Cave.

The show may be re-broadcast next month on PBS, so if you missed it the first time there should be another chance to see the program.

Music From a Painted Cave, by Native American flautist and composer Robert Mirabal, aired on PBS last year to great acclaim.

Later in 2001, Mirabal, of Taos heritage, went on to win three Native American Music Awards: Songwriter of the Year, Record of the Year, and Artist of the Year.

During a two-week period last year, local tribal member Squiemphen participated with Mirabal and other Native American artists in performances of Music From a Painted Cave.

The group performed nightly for two weeks at the Pequot Tribes' Foxwood Resort and Casino in Connecticut.

The final two nights of the performance were recorded on film, and broadcast on PBS. Mirabal recruited Squiemphen to be a part of the show.

Squiemphen, 33, grew up in Donnetta Squiemphen appeared in Music From a Painted Cave on PBS Television.

Warm Springs, and now lives with husband Thurman and family at the tribal fish facility in Parkdale. She is employed at the Natural Resources Hood River Production Program.

She first started dancing at powwows, and later traveled with dance tours for performances in other countries.

She has traveled to Europe three times, and to China one time.

She performed at the opening of the Goodwill Games in Russia, and has also performed in Hawaii.

She has performed often in Canada, where she lived for 10 years.

"Wherever I go, I enjoy representing the vitality of dance through my heritage of the Warm Springs tribes," said Squiemphen.
