

Rodeo

Johnson refers to the people who used to organize the Root Feast Rodeo as the first generation cowboys.

When age started catching up on the first generation, the rodeo lost its energy, and eventually disappeared altogether.

Then last year the Warm Springs Rodeo Association revived the Root Feast Rodeo. The tradition continued this year with excellent results.

The event was a success, Johnson said, not only because of the outstanding competition, but also because of the hard work that went into organizing the rodeo.

"You don't just say, 'Let's put on a rodeo. Instead,'" he said, "it takes a lot of work, experience and knowledge."

For this year's Root Feast Rodeo, everyone worked together and did their part. "Everybody had a job to do, and I was proud because everyone did an excellent job," he said.

The arena directors, the people who work the gates and the timers, the flaggers, the cooks, the stock handlers, the judges — everyone contributed. Johnson said the Rodeo Association wants to thank employees of the Confederated Tribes, many departments of which contributed in various ways.

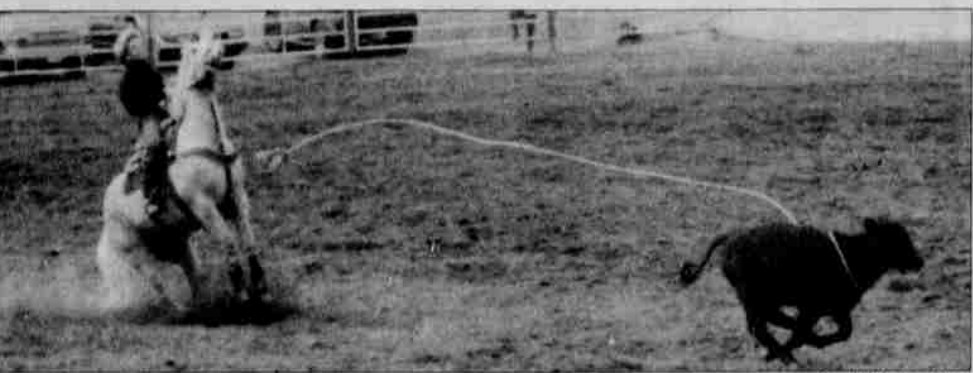

"A lot of people chip in behind the scenes, in ways you don't see," said Johnson. "It all added up to a successful event."

This year the Root Feast Rodeo saw two injuries: Trevor Hurtado had his ankle broken in two places, when a bull stepped on him; and Gilbert Brown had his finger bit off by a horse at the start of the wild horse race. Both men are doing well, recovering from their injuries. Brown's injury sounds particularly bad, but actually things turned out all right. Surgeons were able to re-attach the finger, and Brown even returned later to watch the rest of the rodeo.

"It seems interesting and I like helping people," she says.

Squiemphen would like to leave the reservation but stay in the region.

"I want to get away and try something new. Somewhere where you don't have to drive 20 minutes to get your groceries," she says. Squiemphen said maybe she'd like to have more children in the future, but not for another five or six years.

Her advice to the younger students is: You can do anything if you keep trying.

White Dove Cooper

White Dove Cooper isn't going to waste much time. She plans on going to work this summer while attending Central Oregon Community College. Her long-term goal is to become a massage therapist.

"I'm good at it and I like to help people," she explains.

She hopes to expand her business into the Bend area, where there is a thriving market for massage therapy.

"I want to take advantage of my trust money and follow through with my goal. It's my responsibility to the tribe to use the money wisely and work hard," she says.

Eventually she'd like to own her own home, get married, and have a good paying job. In her personal time, she hopes to always stay in good physical shape. Currently, she likes playing softball and basketball with her little cousins. She likes physical work. One example was when she was a firefighter on the reservation.

Natasha Edwards

In the fall, Natasha Edwards will be attending Portland Community College.

"I chose a community college because I don't really want to start off in a four year university," she says. "The sooner I get through college, the sooner I can get a career going," she adds.

Edwards wants to become a pharmacist so she can help better people's health.

After college, she plans on moving back to the reservation and hopes to land a job at the

Natasha Edwards

Indian Health Services pharmacy. "I want to help better our community," she says.

Edwards feels it's important to return to the reservation because the Native American population has decreasing numbers.

"It's up to us to bring up our standards," she says.

As important as her professional goals is her desire to build on her cultural heritage with her family, her children, and her grandchildren. "I want them to know where they come from and what their traditions are," she says.

Edwards grew up in a home where she was taught the traditions of the ceremonial feasts, traditional weddings, funerals, and name giving ceremonies.

Edwards feels education is the solution to many of her community's problems.

"If we want to better our community, we need to start working with who's in school and who's going to school. If you've dropped out, go back," she says.
