Chase shoots hole-in-one at Circling Raven

No, that wasn't Libby Chase velling, following her hole-in-one Aug. 21 at Circling Raven Golf Course on the Coeur d'Alene reservation. But it could have

Her ace on the 149-yard seventh hole was her first hole-inone. Chase started playing golf eight years ago.

It happened midway through her round on the second day of the all-Indian tournament, one of several she participates in during the summer/fall season.

Chase was having a tough round already when she reached the par-three hole.

"I was frustrated already, so I thought, just go for the pin, and so I did, and I hit the ball," she said.

The seventh hole at the three-year-old Circling Raven offers challenges you might not often see on the golf course.

"It was over a ravine, and it was hard because it was among the pines, and in that ravine, the wind comes through," Chase said of No. 7, "You have to make sure you get it over to the green, because if it's lost there, they have a lot of environmentally protected areas that you can't go into." And that's why she played the hole aggressively.

"I saw it land, and I tried to watch and see where it was going to stop, because I knew it was going towards the pin. It went high and then came down, and I was watching where it hit," she said. "And, I thought, 'All right,' I'm closest to the pin."

She thought that if she didn't place in the tournament, she could at least recoup some of her entry fee money.

"I figured side-bets would be the only way I'd get my money back," she said. "I was thinking, 'If I could get a KP' (closest-topin), that would be great."

But she couldn't find her ball after it touched down.

"All of a sudden it disappeared," she said. "I didn't know if it just rolled over a hill where you couldn't see."

She asked one of her playing partners: "I asked her, 'Where did my ball go.' I said, 'Do you think it went in,' just jokingly."

The other player yelled down to the players at the next tee, asking if there were two balls near the green, as another player had also shot before Chase had. She then ran down to the green, crossing the road, and looked at the green, and more importantly, the cup.

"She yelled back, 'It's in there! It's in there!" she said. "It was kind of shocking."

Chase said she used a sevenwood to make the shot.

"I was having a time," she said. "Their par-threes are really challenging because of the wind factor. From most of the tees you go down to the holes, because they have elevated tees, and on this one you have to go across the ravine."

She played the hole differently from the way she had it the day before.

"I had tried a different club, and I pulled and hit it too far. I didn't even hit the green."

Circling Raven, though, was Chase's favorite course even before Aug. 21.

"I've played it pretty much since it opened," she said. "This year alone I've played there three times."

Chase won $240 on that hole alone, which made up for not placing in the tournament.

She was given the pot for "deuces," where players contrib-
