Tribes work to restore meadow

By Leslie Mitts

It's taken a whole team to begin restoring Glaze Meadow, and it's a team that has included several tribal organizations and tribal workers.

Tribal construction workers are learning new skills as part of a partnership between the Sisters Ranger District, Oregon Natural Resource Council, Geovisions and Warm Springs Forest Product Industries.

Jim Crocker, manager of Geovisions, said the project is funded in part by a resource advisory council grant.

The project is aimed toward restoring the meadow located near Black Butte Ranch.

The tribal construction crews, funded by Geovisions, took classes to learn how to use GPS systems in order to download data for the organizations involved.

"They're doing a good job out there," Crocker said. "It's nice to see them getting some skills with the GPS."

According to Crocker, "They go out every day and GPS roads and trails and then bring them back in." After that, he said, Geovisions downloads the data for those involved in the project.

"They're making good progress," Crocker added. "It's a nice partnership with the forest service."

According to Maret Pajutee, district ecologist for the Sisters Ranger District, up to four tribal members worked for ten days for the Glaze Meadow Restoration Project.

Of the workers, Pajutee said, "They hadn't worked much off of the reservation before, and it was new skills they were learning in terms of GPS."

"It's a really exciting project for us because it's a partnership project," Pajutee added.

She said, "We've just been excited to forge a new partnership and find ways that we could explore agreement about managing old growth."

The Glaze Meadow area, she explained, is made up of both old growth trees and new growth trees. The restoration project aims to expand the amount of old growth in the forest.

When the groups began to restore the area, they needed to know where all the trails and roads are, Pajutee said. "We didn't really know where they were and just needed somebody to walk through these forests and find them all," she added.

"This is an area that we know was traditionally used by the tribes," Pajutee continued, for hunting and herding horses.

In Pajutee's opinion, "It was great to get tribal members back out there just to tell us what they saw and help us with the project."

School BBQ this evening

The Back to School Barbeque and school supply giveaway is from 4:30 to 7 p.m. on Thursday, August 31 on the grassy area behind the Warm Springs Family Resource Center.

This is a chance for 509-J staff and Warm Springs families to meet and greet before the start of another great school year.

For the barbeque, the Education Committee suggests you bring a chair or blanket.
