River conservancy receives conservation awards

The Deschutes River Conservancy is gaining national recognition for its successful work in Central Oregon. The conservancy recently received two distinguished conservation awards. Serving on the board of the Deschutes River Conservancy from Warm Springs are Bobby Brunoe, manager of the tribal Natural Resources Branch, and Jim Manion, director of Warm Springs Power Enterprises.

The Deschutes River Conservancy recently received the U.S. Department of the Interior's Cooperative Conservation Award in recognition of its many achievements in finding sensible solutions to water management challenges in Oregon. The Deschutes River Conservancy (DRC) was nominated by the Bureau of Reclamation for its practical, incentive-based solutions to the Deschutes Basin's water management challenges and for its ability to produce quantifiable results.

The Secretary of the Interior, Dirk Kempthorne, presented the award to Tod Heisler, Executive Director of the DRC, accompanied by Delvis Heath, Chief of the Warm Springs Tribe, during a Departmental Convocation on May 9 in Washington, D.C.

The Cooperative Conservation Award recognizes achievements that involve collaborative activity among a diverse range of entities that may include federal, state, local and tribal governments, private for profit and nonprofit institutions, other non-governmental entities, and individuals.

In 2006, several DRC projects demonstrated such collaborative activities, such as increasing summer flows in the Middle Deschutes to record levels and achieving the 100 cubic-foot-per-second milestone for the first time in over 100 years. In 2006, the DRC also achieved the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife's minimum flow target of 20 cubic feet per second in Whychus Creek near Sisters for the first time in 100 years.

Known for innovative solutions to water management, the DRC implemented a water conservation program, water transfer program, and a water bank, all of which have proven to be valuable tools for irrigation districts in Central Oregon.

On May 31, Heisler will travel to Salem to receive the Oregon Water Resources Department State Stewardship and Conservation Award.

Recognition from the Water Resources Commission is given on an annual basis to individual citizens, groups, businesses or other partners that embody the Oregon Water Resources Department's mission "to serve the public by practicing and promoting responsible water management" and for conserving and restoring Oregon's water resources. Recipients of the award demonstrate an outstanding commitment to water conservation and implementation of water efficient operations.

The DRC is a non-profit organization formed in 1996 with a mission to restore streamflow and improve water quality in the Deschutes Basin.

Training offered in prevention of suicide

There will be an Applied Suicide Intervention Skills Training session from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on Thursday and Friday, June 7-8 at the Warm Springs Community Wellness Center.

Applied Suicide Intervention Training (ASIST) is a two-day interactive workshop that trains individuals and community providers in suicide intervention.

The issue of suicide intervention has taken on greater importance locally, as the use of methamphetamine use on the reservation has increased, said Charlotte Herkshan, counselor at the Warm Springs Community Counseling Center, who organized the training session.

Two recent suicides, Herkshan said, were related to methamphetamine use, she said.

The ASIST program provides training in how to recognize and assess the potential risk of suicide. This workshop also equips the participant with intervention skills to keep the person safe until the appropriate level of ongoing help can be assessed.

There is space for 30 participants, with 15 people signed up so far, said Herkshan.

The trainers for the program are two representatives from the Oregon Youth Authority, and two tribal members, Marcella

Hall and Alice Sampson.

Participants who complete the training will be able to:

Recognize attitudes about suicide; identify suicide factors and estimate risk; intervene with a person at risk; list resources available to a person at risk; and commit to help coordinate social support for a person at risk. For information, or to register, please call the Community Counseling Center at 553-2305.
