Fisheries managers revising salmon projections

(AP) - Salmon managers in the Columbia River Basin say only about half the number of spring chinook originally predicted will return past Bonneville Dam on the Columbia River this year.

Managers say about 120,000 to 150,000 spring chinook will return rather than the 300,000 originally expected.

The Idaho Fish and Game Commission plans to meet Thursday to consider changing fishing regulations on seasons that have already started to reflect the lower numbers of salmon.

The state had expected to allow sport anglers to catch about 9,000 chinook from the Clearwater River and 9,600 from the Salmon and Little Salmon rivers.

But Larry Barrett of Fish and Game says that could be dropped to 2,000 on the Clearwater and 2,500 on the Salmon and Little Salmon.
