Youth from the Warm Springs Place for Kids-Boys and Girls Club had a hands-on experience with puppets that are used in animated movies.

It was a chance for the youth to learn about the process of animated movie-making, and to expand their views of what kind of career they choose in life.

"When you go through school, sometimes you get a limited idea of what your career path might be," said Scott Tom, one of the puppet masters who helped conduct the workshop.

"To see something like this shows you that there are job opportunities out there that you might not have heard about otherwise," he said.

The youth from the Place for Kids-Boys and Girls Club first went to see the animated film Coraline at the Bend Film Festival.

Film crew members who worked on the puppets in the movie then conducted a workshop for the youth.

The animated film production company Laika Entertainment House provided this opportunity.

The youth learned the entire process of animation, from the creation of the puppets, to seeing how the puppet characters come to life.
