

KWSO programming to recognize our veterans

Each Veterans Day, Warm Springs Community Radio—KWSO, airs special programming to recognize the contributions and sacrifices veterans have made in serving their country.

Several years ago KWSO read the names of Veterans and this year—the list will be read again including all Warm Springs Veteran's past and present. Below is the list that has been developed.

Community Members are asked to review these names for accuracy. The hope is that, with community feedback, each Veteran's branch and era of service can be added. If you know of a Veteran not on the list—it can be added. To verify information, contribute additional details or add someone—please contact KWSO.

Tribal Welcome Pole raised at Port Angeles college

PORT ANGELES, Wash. (AP) — A dozen tribal members from throughout the North Olympic Peninsula lifted a Welcome Pole into place at the Peninsula College Longhouse on Tuesday afternoon.

The 20-foot-tall statue depicts a traditionally dressed Native American with forearms extended and hands facing upward in the gesture of welcome common to the Lower Elwha Klallam and Jamestown S'Klallam tribes.

About 250 people braved the drizzle to attend the pole-raising ceremony at the main campus of Peninsula College at 1502 E. Lauridsen Blvd. in Port Angeles.

After the pole was secured in place, the crowd was invited into the Longhouse for dancing, drumming and singing.

A reception followed at the Pirate Union Building.

As the carriers lifted the heavy statue into place, it teetered precariously at about a 50-degree angle from the wet ground outside the Longhouse, called The House of Learning.

"Get some help over here now," a couple of the men shouted, prompting a half-dozen people to rush to lend a hand in lifting the statue.

The trunk of a cedar tree logged near Lake Crescent was donated by the Lower Elwha Klallam when the Longhouse opened Oct. 15, 2007.

Jamestown S'Klallam artist Jeff Monson has been carving the piece since June in a tent open to the public on the Peninsula College campus.

"I studied many other welcome poles," he said, adding that he remembered the first time he saw welcome poles in British Columbia.

"They were the most amazing things I have ever seen," Monson said.

"I thought that I absolutely had to do one of those one day," Jamestown S'Klallam Chairman Ron Allen represented his tribe as a formal witness to the event.

"I am very proud of this work and very proud that a Jamestown artist did the artwork on this," Allen said.

"The Welcome Pole is the spirit of this project."

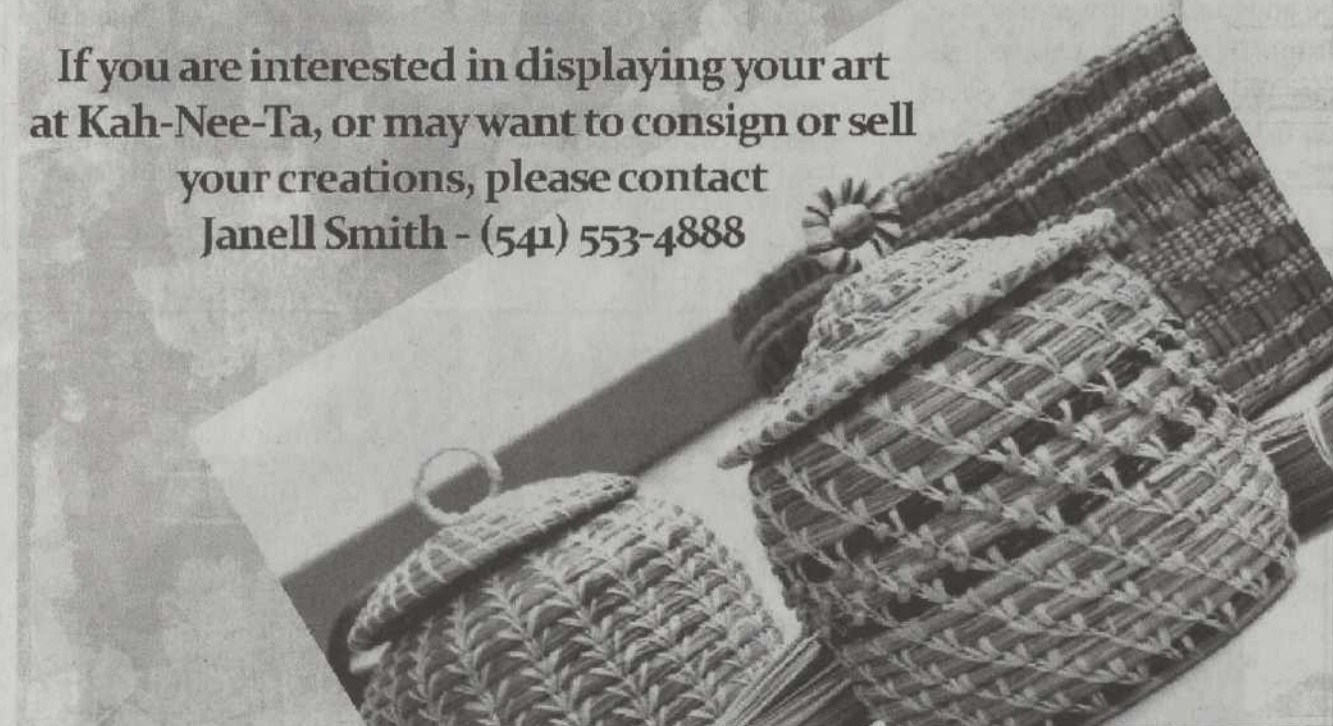

Allen said he was appreciative of the Longhouse project as a whole as well.

"Our students come here and are in competition with students of many other cultures, but right here on the campus is a piece of their culture," he said.

"It creates a bridge for the cultures."
