Grant will help with job training

A new grant opens the door for those who have been out of work.

Central Oregon's Intergovernmental Council's On-the-Job Training Program was recently granted $115,000 by the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act to help people re-train in new positions.

The On-the-Job training program allows employers to hire someone and train them in new areas.

The employee learns new skills, and retains permanent employment when the training period has ended.

By June 2011, they hope to sign 18 people to OJT contracts. Currently, seven people are working in on-the-job training positions throughout the region.

The grant aims to help job seekers in Jefferson, Crook, and Deschutes County.
