

Important change to Youth Work program

The Summer Youth Work Program is going through change. This is important information for youth, parents/guardians, and other youth serving organizations.

This year the Youth Development Program will be conducting mandatory workshops starting in February and continuing on through to the middle of April 2012.

All youth who want to work this summer must attend all workshops.

Upon verification that all workshops have been attended, the youth's name will be put on the Summer Youth Work list.

The first sessions will be this Friday, Feb. 10 from 11 a.m.-3 p.m. in the first-floor training room at the Education Building, 1110 Wasco St., Warm Springs.

The second session will be Monday, Feb. 13, from 11 a.m.-1:30 p.m., also in the first-floor training room at the Education Building.

A light lunch will be provided

Youth who want to work this summer in the program must attend the workshops.

at both sessions. Please attend these brainstorming sessions and more information will be given at that time about the mandatory workshops and Summer Youth Work.

Workshops will be conducted twice a week on Wednesday and Thursday, from 4:30-6:30 after school at the Job Creation and Development Program offices beginning on Feb. 29. The agenda for these workshops are still in the making, so please share information and stay informed as flyers will be posted in the community.

Again, if you want to work this summer, you must attend the workshops.

Jan. storms boost snowpack

(AP) - January storms have provided a dramatic boost to Oregon's previously anemic snowpack.

That's good news not only for ski resorts but for those who depend on water from melting snow to support agriculture, salmon habitat and hydroelectric power.

Hydrologist Jon Lea with the U.S. Natural Resources Conservation Service said that Oregon's combined basins snowpack on Jan. 14 was only 35 percent of average. Then by last week it was 70 percent of average.

Lea says the snowpack statistics had been at record lows and they're still below average so he hopes snow keeps accumulating. He says it's good news that snowpack increases occurred all around the state.

Lea says long-term forecasts call for normal to above-normal precipitation and below-average temperatures.

He says Washington state's snowpack has been close to average most of the season, and stood at 102 percent of average as of Monday.

It's that time of the year again. The 19th Annual Heart Smart Dinner has been set for February 22, 2012 at the Agency Longhouse.
