

OSU Extension hosted Resources Day at the Museum at Warm Springs last week. Second-graders from Warm Springs Elementary School toured resource stations that were set up in the field by the museum. Topics at the stations included birds, river life, tree identification, fire fighting, the web of life, and animal pelts.

Law allows use of bycatch salmon

(AP) — Gov. John Kitzhaber signed the salmon bycatch bill last week. The law is intended to avoid the waste of salmon that are incidentally caught by commercial boats going after other fish.

Under the new law the salmon—typically hauled in with whiting—would be given to the state. Processors would keep some to defray the costs. Food banks would buy the rest at a significant discount. Oregon Food Bank resource manager Mike Moran said it could amount to 20 to 30 tons of fish a year. The bill was passed by the Oregon Legislature in February.

John Day River opens for spring chinook fishing

(AP) — A stretch of the John Day River last week opened for spring chinook salmon fishing for the first time in 36 years.

The Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife announced Monday that a 20-mile stretch of the river near Kimberly would be open for spring chinook until Sunday, June 3.

The opening of the season marks a milestone in the rebound of wild spring chinook populations in the John Day.

The river will be open from the Longview Ranch's Johnson Creek Division bridge upstream to the mouth of Rattlesnake Creek.

The daily bag limit is two adult chinook salmon and five jack salmon.

Work to begin on Simnasho water project

Work is moving forward on the surge tank location plan for the Simnasho water supply, said Roy Spino, tribal Utilities water and wastewater chief operator.

Within the next few weeks, Spino said, drilling will begin at the well location which is about a mile from Highway 26.

"We'll then have some geotech work that needs to be done," he said "because the line is going to run down Beaver Grade."

Currently, IHS is developing a plan for the controls and design needed for the water system. That contract will be awarded in June.

The pipeline contract will open for bids on July 8, and the contract will be awarded on July 22.

Bids for the storage tank will be advertised on July 6. That contract will be awarded July 27.

"We're hoping to have that part of the project completed by October 31," Spino said. "This will give us better than a month to work out any bugs."

For this project, the EPA has contributed $1.4 million. HUD has put forth $500,000. The tribes will pick up a balance of $700,000.

"So we're looking at a target of December 22 to have everything online," Spino said. "Simnasho will have an arsenic-free water supply by Christmas."

The goal has taken nearly 12 years to achieve, Spino said. "This has been a long, hard process of getting everything done. But once we found the funding, things started to roll fairly quickly. There is a light at the end of this tunnel."

Easy solution to cloudy water

After last week's work on a water main in Warm Springs, some areas of the community were reporting cloudy water coming from the faucet. Roy Spino is happy to report that this is not out of the ordinary. In repairing the water main, he said, workers used a technique to oxygenate the water supply.

Let your faucet water run for about 15 minutes, Spino said. This will remove the air bubbles, and the water will appear clear once again.
