

At Camp Naimuma

Yvonne Iverson/Spilyay

Due to the Waterfalls 2 fire, camp was relocated to HeHe this year, with 61 campers in attendance. Clockwise from top: Campers play a game called Crows and Cranes, led by the Diabetes Prevention Program; cooling off with a dip in the creek; and Ken Kipley, of WSPD, teaches archery.

Team releases Seekseequa tower assessment

The Resource Management Interdisciplinary Team has just released a draft environmental assessment for review by the tribal public.

The draft document provides an environmental analysis of the Seekseequa Telecommunications Tower.

The Seekseequa Telecommunications Tower document was prepared by the Project Interdisciplinary Team to provide options for one component of the tribal telecommunications plan and to comply with provisions set forth in the National Environmental Policy Act, as directed through the U.S. Department of Homeland Security, which funded the project.

Two alternatives were formulated and numerous locations were considered for this project, taking into account present resource conditions, the area to be served by the tower, and public input. The Seekseequa Telecommunications Tower will improve two-way radio communications in the southern portion of the reservation.

The document is divided into sections explaining the purpose and need for action, the two alternatives, affected environment, potential impacts and mitigation. There are maps showing the project's location and surrounding areas.

The goal of Alternative A is to continue current management. Activities such as hunting, recreation and cultural food gathering would continue as in the past. Alternative B includes construction of a 140 foot telecommunications tower with microwave radios to connect the tower to the tribal network and radio repeaters, and distribute the radio signal within the Seekseequa District.

The project will improve communications for police, firefighters, medical staff and other emergency crews.

The alternatives would have varying impacts on water, fish, wildlife, cultural, timber, range, soil and economic resources and there would also be changes to the transportation system.

For more information or copies of the document contact Lonny Macy in the Planning Department. (See official public notice on page 9.)
