CRITFC Salmon Conference this week

The Columbia River Inter-Tribal Fish Commission and its member tribes this week are bringing together tribal, state, and federal fisheries co-managers, environmental groups and the interested public to the second Future of Our Salmon conference.

This year's conference, Oct. 17-18 in Portland, will focus on hatchery policies and how they can best shape salmon recovery efforts in the Columbia River Basin region as a whole.

Conference panelists and participants will discuss hatcheries from a scientific, management, and legal perspective.

Members of various fishing communities will explore the public benefits of hatcheries.

Tribal and state biologists will highlight various hatchery programs that are rebuilding salmon populations throughout the region.

Executives from the tribes, states, Bonneville Power Administration and National Oceanic Administration. A Fisheries will end the conference with a strategy on how to move forward. By gathering all the agencies with co-management authority, the tribes hope that the conference will result in a vision of a successful hatchery program that the entire region can support.

"Hatcheries are a necessary tool to rebuild and maintain Columbia Basin salmon populations," said N. Kathryn "Kat" Brigham, chairwoman of the Columbia River Inter-Tribal Fish Commission. "The key is to utilize hatcheries in a way that benefits everyone and allows us all to move forward together."

The conference is being sponsored by the Bonneville Power Administration, Center for Coastal Margin Observation and Prediction, Columbia River Gorge Commission, Hobbs Strauss Dean & Walker, Lower Columbia Estuary Partnership, NOAA Fisheries, Northwest Power and Conservation Council, US Fish and Wildlife Service, and the Washington Department of Fish & Wildlife.

"Everyone in the Pacific Northwest benefits from healthy and sustainable salmon populations but we need to talk about how we are going to get there. We need to talk about what recovery looks like and how hatcheries can best help us reach this goal," said Paul Lumley, executive director for CRITFC.

The conference is open to fishers, environmental organizations, government representatives, and the public. Registration is available online or at the door. For more information on the conference or to register visit: www.critfc.org/future.

Klamaths get share of record salmon run

(AP) - The Klamath Tribes are getting a share of the record run of chinook salmon coming into Northern California's Klamath River.

Tribal members are holding a ceremony Thursday at the Iron Gate fish hatchery just south of the Oregon-California border and are picking up hundreds of fresh salmon that swim into the hatchery.

Tribal vice chairman Don Gentry says the tribe has been getting frozen surplus salmon from the hatchery for years, but this represents a step closer to being able to harvest salmon themselves from traditional fishing spots - something they have not been able to do for a century.

Implementation of an agreement to remove four dams from the Klamath River to restore salmon returns to the upper Klamath Basin has stalled in Congress.
