Cold weather and livestock feed requirements

by Scott Duggan
W.S. OSU Extension

This month has produced a variety of cold weather, including rain, wet snow, dry snow, fog and very cold temperatures. This reminds me of how vulnerable livestock can be in cold, wet weather.

As old folks used to say about cattle and winter, "February will shake 'em and March will take 'em."

Our December weather was at times like March weather. So here is some key information about feeding livestock in the winter.

Livestock in general is very well equipped to handle cold weather. Mother Nature gives these animals a thick hair coat that keeps them well protected down to 18 degrees.

When it dips below this critical temperature, animals will need to burn extra energy to stay warm.

However, if animals get soaked by a wet, heavy snow, and their coat is wet to the skin, then the critical temperature may be reached at 59 degrees.

If the coat stays wet and night time temperatures plummet into the teens, this combination can be deadly.

Ranchers can help their livestock combat these cold temperatures by increasing the amount of forage fed and by increasing the quality of the forage.

Digesting forages takes energy and a by-product of this process is heat. This heat generated from breaking down fibrous feedstuffs can really help animals on cold, winter nights.

Another strategy for dealing with the cold weather is to feed cattle in the late afternoon.

The heat from digestion peaks a few hours after a meal, so offering meals in the evening can help cattle cope with the cold nighttime temperatures.

Using cattle as an example, a general rule to follow is when temperatures drop below the critical temperature for livestock of 18 degrees, cattle owners need to increase the amount of feed provided by about 1 percent for every degree below 18 degrees in dry cold. If there is wind or rain then you need to increase even more.

Also, as many ranchers already know, the thinner the cow gets, the more feed required to keep her warm.

Keeping cows in good body condition not only keeps them warm in the winter, but sets them up to have a healthy calf in the spring.

Hunters Raffle at Resources

The tribal Natural Resources Branch is hosting a hunter reporting raffle, with one of the prizes being a 2016 bighorn ram tag.

The raffle is open to hunters who turn in all their tags and completed reporting for the closed 2015 hunts. Submit these to the Natural Resources Branch by Feb. 2 in order to be entered in the raffle.

Other prizes include 2016 Ceded Land doe tags, plus various hunting and fishing gear. Multiple names will be drawn at a public hunters meeting in February.
