Schimmel back in WNBA

Shoni Schimmel has rejoined the New York Liberty professional women's basketball team.

She has been in training camp with the team since last week.

Ms. Schimmel was a WNBA All-Star guard two years ago, then took one year off to be with family.

"I needed a break, going from high school to college to the pros," Schimmel was saying last week. Her grandmother had been sick and recently passed away, she said.

Before going back to New York, Shoni had been living in Central Oregon, often practicing at the Warm Springs Community Center gym.

She was the eighth pick in the 2014 WNBA draft, having been a star player at Louisville.

Council okays 2018 fishing regs

Tribal Council in April adopted the off-reservation fishing regulations for 2018, regulating fisheries in the tribes' usual and accustomed fishing places.

The regulations, approved by Council resolution no. 12,461, were adopted as recommended by the Fish and Wildlife Committee.

The committee also "has the designated authority to add, rescind or modify off-reservation fishing regulations on an in-season basis without additional approval of the Tribal Council," the resolution says.

Resolution no. 12,461 says the regulations as approved are for "2018 and future years unless modified by the Fish and Wildlife Committee or by Tribal Council...."

Ceded Lands areas covered by the regulations—available at the Branch of Natural Resources—include Sherars Falls, Hood River, the John Day River, Eagle Creek above Bonneville dam, and other usual and accustomed fishing stations. The regulations of resolution 12,461 do not include the Columbia River mainstem fisheries, which are managed by separate regulations.
