

Hemp: resolutions approve code provisions

The 2019 farm bill contains a provision that a person with a felony cannot be permitted to grow hemp. The tribal regulation includes the same restriction.

In adopting the two resolutions last week, Tribal Council also stated an interest to possibly at some point in the future allow the tribes to license individuals to operate their own grow operations.

The Council members agreed that the Cannabis Commission should look into this matter, and report back to Council in about year. Councilwoman Carina Miller brought this up, saying she had heard from individuals who would might want to go into this business.

This kind of licensing was not part of the Cannabis Referendum vote, said Council Chairman Austin Greene.

Councilwoman Val Switzler also had a concern about this, saying licensing individual grow operations would take the cannabis idea beyond the original referendum mandate.

In the end the Council voted to have the analysis by the Cannabis Commission. The Twenty-Eighth Tribal Council could then look at the report in 2020.
