Tribal land victory in Oklahoma

The U.S. Supreme Court last week said that a large swath of eastern Oklahoma, including Tulsa, is Native American land for purposes of federal criminal law in a decision that the state argued could call into question thousands of state prosecutions for serious crimes.

Justice Neil Gorsuch penned the 5-4 opinion joined by the liberals on the bench.

"Today we are asked whether the land these treaties promised remains an Indian reservation for purposes of federal criminal law," Gorsuch wrote. "Because Congress has not said otherwise, we hold the government to its word."

Under the law, crimes involving Native Americans on a reservation are under federal, not state, jurisdiction.

The National Congress of American Indian, along with the Native American Rights Fund, applauded the decision, which confirmed that the treaty-defined boundaries of the Muscogee Creek Nation still remain in full force.

Through treaty, the United States "solely guaranteed" the Muscogee Creek Nation their reservation as a "permanent home" in exchange for leaving their eastern homelands. These guarantees are contained in the Treaty with the Creeks of 1832, and the Treaty with the Creeks 1833.

In a later treaty, the United States reaffirmed that the reservation was "forever set apart as a home for said Creek Nation." This was in the Treaty with the Creeks of 1866.

Last week's U.S. Supreme Court decision reaffirms that understanding.
