Indian Country a year after covid

As Covid-19 began to spread across the United States, the first documented case in Indian Country was on the Confederated Tribes of the Umatilla Indian Reservation in Pendleton, on March 2, 2020.

On that day the Umatilla tribes announced that a staff member at the Wildhorse Resort & Casino had tested positive for the coronavirus. The next day, the tribes announced their casino would be temporarily closed.

Since then, the deadly virus has spread throughout Indian Country with a deadly force.

The voluntary closures of tribal casinos has resulted in more than $10 billion in losses in revenue, leading to reduced tribal services to tribal citizenry.

Tribes provide services such as health care, elder programs, education, housing, among others.

As the year progressed, Covid-19 cases in Indian Country grew, devastating communities.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, Native American communities have lost at least 5,307 lives to Covid-19, as of late February.

has the highest Covid-19 mortality rate among all races. The breakdown among two races tells the story:

After contracting Covid-19, one in 390 Indigenous Americans has died (or 256 deaths per 100,000). For comparison: After contracting covid, one in 665 White Americans has died.
