IHS Portland Area shows covid improvement

The Portland Area of the Indian Health Service has seen improvement in its Covid-19 positive testing rate. This good news is reflected in the latest IHS covid data, showing results through May 30.

On the national level across Indian Country: IHS has administered 2.41 million coronavirus tests to its service areas members. Of that total since last spring, 197,459 tests have returned positive.

These numbers show an overall improvement, with an increase of less than 1 percent from the previous week's data.

Based on the cumulative percent positive, the highest rates have been seen in three areas: The Navajo Area (15.1 percent positivity among those tested); the Phoenix Area (13.1 percent); and the Oklahoma City Area (12 percent).

The seven-day rolling average positivity column offers a more contemporary look at the impact of the coronavirus: The data shows where Covid-19 cases have been increasing most recently in Indian Country.

The Portland Area, which includes the Warm Springs Reservation, had been among the top three in positivity for about a month. The most recent data shows the Portland Area is no longer among the top positivity areas in IHS testing. The top two now are the Phoenix Area, and the Bemidji Area, which includes Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Supreme Court sides with tribal police authority

The Supreme Court ruled this week that tribal police officers can stop and search non-Indians on tribal lands for potential violations of state or federal law.

The justices unanimously reversed an appellate ruling in favor of a non-Native motorist who was charged with drug-related crimes after a tribal officer searched his pickup truck on a public road that crosses the Crow reservation in Montana.

The Supreme Court has previously held that tribal police have little authority over non-Indians, but Justice Stephen Breyer wrote for this court, saying that allowing a temporary stop and detention—so that state or federal authorities can be called in—enhances public safety.

"To deny a tribal police officer authority to search and detain for a reasonable time any person he or she believes may commit or has committed a crime would make it difficult for tribes to protect themselves against ongoing threats," Breyer wrote.

The case involved a traffic stop in 2016 in which Officer James Saylor of the Crow Tribe Police Department came upon a pickup truck with its headlights on and motor running, parked on the shoulder of U.S. Route 212.

The driver, Joshua Cooley, had watery, bloodshot eyes, Saylor said. Cooley also had two semiautomatic rifles and a handgun in the pickup, as well as methamphet-amine.

Saylor called for help from federal and county officers, who eventually arrested Cooley.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals sided with Cooley, saying that non-Indians can be detained only if evidence of a crime is "apparent" or "obvious."

The Justice Department appealed, and the Supreme Court agreed with the Justice argument, issuing its ruling on Tuesday of this week.
