For tribal treaty rights

The U.S. government is announcing a set of memoranda from 18 federal agencies, regarding tribal treaty rights.

The memoranda of understanding are from the departments of Agriculture, Defense, Commerce, Education, Energy, Homeland Security, Housing and Urban Development, Interior, Justice, Labor, Transportation, Veterans Affairs, State, and the Environmental Protection Agency, Office of Personnel Management, the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation and the Council on Environmental Quality.

The agencies are ordered to issue reports on their efforts to strengthen treaty protections within the next 180 days.

The following is a statement from Judith LeBlanc (Caddo), executive director of Native Organizers Alliance:

"The President's announcement comes after a journey thousands of miles across Indian Country, and countless prayers offered from Native peoples across the nation, that the federal government do more to protect our most sacred places. Our people have spoken across Indian Country, saying enough is enough. Our sacred sites must be protected and our treaty rights upheld."

More than 85,000 people signed a petition calling on the President to direct federal agencies to uphold the treaties and gain the consent of tribes in infrastructure and development projects.

"We urge each agency to craft a memorandum that not only respects treaty rights but acknowledges the great harm done when tribes and Native peoples are not given the opportunity to consent to projects affecting their lands, waters, and resources," Ms. LeBlanc said.

"It is not enough to check a box to 'consult' with tribes with projects like dams, mines, and oil pipelines. The treaties demand that tribes give their consent to these projects. This failure of agencies to gain the free, prior, and informed consent of tribes is a violation of treaty rights and a flawed process that leads to the desecration of our sacred sites.

"For generations, the federal government has failed to follow through on its commitment to tribes. This failure has led to the destruction and desecration of our sacred lands, waters, and resources. Promises were made to our ancestors but never kept. We are hopeful that today's announcement directing federal agencies to strengthen treaty protections is a critical step towards upholding our tribal treaty rights."

Judge in Nevada rules against tribes trying to protect land

Two Native American tribes have failed again in their bid to persuade a federal judge in Nevada that a lithium mine planned near the Oregon line is on sacred lands where their ancestors were massacred in 1865.

U.S. District Judge Miranda Du ruled last week that additional historical accounts the tribes submitted still fall short of evidence needed to temporarily block digging.

She refused a request by the Oregon-based Burns Paiute Tribe and the Reno-Sparks Indian Colony to reconsider her earlier ruling denying their bid to block an archaeological survey.

Nevada Lithium Corporation's construction is scheduled to begin next year about 230 miles northeast of Reno.

Court to hear case of destruction of sacred site

A federal appeals court is hearing a case of major significance to Native American tribes this week after the U.S. Federal Highway Administration bulldozed a longstanding sacred site near Mount Hood in 2008 to add a turning lane to a nearby highway.

Members of the Confederated Tribes and Bands of the Yakama Nation and the Confederated Tribes of Grande Ronde say the government broke numerous federal laws by bulldozing their sacred site, including the Religious Freedom Restoration Act, the Free Exercise Clause of the Constitution, and several environmental laws. Hereditary chiefs Wilbur Slockish and Johnny Jackson, and elder Carol Logan, alerted the federal government to their use of the site before construction began.

But their pleas fell on deaf ears, and the government destroyed the site anyway.

In response to their lawsuit, the government says it has complete authority to destroy sacred sites located on federal land, and the trial court agreed.

This week's argument comes shortly after the Ninth Circuit heard oral argument in a similar case, Apache Stronghold v. United States.

There, the lawyer represents the Apaches whose sacred site, Chi'chil Bildagoteel, or Oak Flat, is on the brink of being obliterated by a foreign-owned copper-mining company.

In both of these cases, the destruction of the indigenous sacred site would end longstanding Native American religious practices forever.

The lawyers in the cases are asking the Ninth Circuit to protect the ability of Native Americans to continue their traditional faith practices.

Warm Springs Head Start is closed to children the week of Thanksgiving. But parent-teacher conferences will still take place.
