$50,000 for languages

The Confederated Tribes received a $50,000 grant to help the tribes' Native languages programs, while recovering from the covid pandemic.

The grant to the Culture and Heritage Department will help fund audio recordings, articles and programs designed to enhance inter-generational learning opportunities for 645 youth engaged in language programs.

The grant is from the Association of Tribal Archives, Libraries, and Museums. Funds to that organization were provided by the National Endowment for the Humanities, as part of the American Rescue Plan Act of 2021.

Culture and Heritage oversees the development of language materials to revitalize and restore the languages. Through the pandemic the tribes' lost elders who were among the last speakers. The $50,000 will help rebuild staff, creating opportunities for more learning, teaching, and developing speakers.

"Covid-19 hit tribal communities particularly hard," said Susan Feller, president of the Association of Tribal Archives, Libraries and Museums.

"The pandemic is not only responsible for the loss of culture keepers, Native language speakers, elders, and government leaders, but also the closure of cultural institutions, furloughed staff, and reduced programming.

"This opportunity will provide much-needed financial support and create humanities-based programs that bring cultural practitioners and the public together in a dialogue that embraces the civic and cultural life of Native communities."

The Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs was selected by an independent Peer Review Committee, and is one out of 84 awardees to receive funding. Other awardees representing 25 states include tribal governments and Native nonprofit organizations, as well as higher education institutions and non-native nonprofit organizations working in partnership with state or federally recognized tribal entities.
