

Museum at Warm Springs May re-opening

The Museum at Warm Springs is looking at an early-May reopening date. The closure has been for the installation of a new heating, ventilation and air conditioning system: The process has taken longer than expected, due to unexpected supply chain issues.

"This is our most recent update," said museum executive director Elizabeth Woody. "We are fairly certain at this point we will be reopening very soon." Meanwhile in other Museum at Warm Springs news:

The grounds clean-up last year attracted more than 150 enthusiastic museum members, tribal members, board members, donors and other museum friends who spent the day sprucing up the museum grounds.

If it was so much fun for everyone, the museum decided to hold another grounds clean-up day this year, date to be announced. In addition: The museum Annual Report for last year is now available. The report can be found on the website: museumatwarmsprings.org

Regarding the HVAC closure, the museum staff has been working during the installation.

Major funders of the new system include the National Park Service, the Roundhouse Foundation, the Ford Family Foundation, the Portland General Electric Foundation, the Spirit Mountain Community Fund, and Oregon Cultural Trust.
