

Employee SpotlightJob opportunity gives tribal member a chance to shine

TREVOR AARON has been working in Information Systems at the Casino for a few months, and loves it. It is a behind the scenes position — working with computers, and that is right up his alley. Trevor was working for Complete Software Solutions in Salem when he heard the Casino was looking for computer technicians. Being a tribal member with roots in the community, it sounded like a great opportunity. "I was pleased to hear that this position offers more money than I was earning at the time," said Trevor. "There was a certain pride about working here, also. It was much closer to home, too. Overall it was the best thing that could have happened to me at the time."

Trevor began his career in computer work at the tribal offices, where managers gave him a chance to receive training on the office system and learn about all the software the Tribe uses. It was after the experience he gained at the Tribe that he was offered a position with Complete Software Solutions.

"Without New Horizons Learning Center and Complete Software Solutions, I would still be looking for direction in my career," Trevor said.

Trevor likes his job because he is given assigned tasks, and the freedom and tools necessary to complete the job at hand. He said, "I tend to be more productive when left alone with a task, if I am given clear direction."

As a tribal member working at the Casino, Trevor says that he is proud of the good things the Casino can help provide for members. He is from a family that is very active within the Tribe, its activities, and committees, and keeps informed of all the programs and benefits that are being established.

He would like to see the Casino become a premiere destination on the West Coast, which provides a family-oriented good time for everyone.

Autumn concert series underway

The Native American band REDBONE will open for THE MARSHALL TUCKER BAND at the Casino on Thursday, November 7. Tickets are still available. The word Redbone began as a Cajun word meaning half-breed. Now it means four Native American performers who have sold over 22 million albums and singles worldwide, currently have a hot-selling CD distributed by WEA, once held number one on the Billboard singles charts for 16 weeks running, and are now packing in major venues like the Foxwood Casino in Connecticut.

To date, Redbone has released 12 albums. Their new WEA/Avenue release, Redbone Live, continues their successful tradition.

Redbone was recently nominated to the prestigious Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in Cleveland, and have also been honored by the Smithsonian Institution as the first Native American Rock and Roll band, and were nominated in February of 1994 for the first Native American Arts Award.

For two decades, The Marshall Tucker Band has entertained sold-out audiences, wowed critics, and influenced hot country recording acts like the Kentucky Headhunters, Confederate Railroad, and Travis Tritt with its definitive blend of rock, rhythm and blues, jazz, country, and gospel.

"The buying public never really cared whether we were country or rock and roll," says founding member Doug Gray. "They called us southern rock, but we played everything. We're still playing the same songs, but now the times have changed, we're playing to more of a country audience than in the past."

The Marshall Tucker Band got its start in Spartanburg, South Carolina, when Gray teamed up with Tommy and Toy Caldwell. They borrowed the name Marshall Tucker from a piano tuner in the area and signed with Capricorn Records, the label that rocketed the Allman Brothers to national fame. The band first teamed up with the Allman Brothers in 1973. The following year they were headliners.

With six gold and two platinum albums, the group's music is still played today on rock and country radio stations. In the 1990's, the band scored five hit singles on Billboard's country chart. Their music can be heard on the movie soundtracks of Smoky and the Bandit, The Pursuit of D.B. Cooper, and Shipwrecked. Their latest album, Walk Outside The Lines, was released by Cabin Fever Music.

Country singer, DOUG STONE is scheduled to play on Thursday, December 5. For tickets please call Spirit Mountain Ticket Sales at 879-2350 or 1-800-760-7977.
