OMSI: SALMON CAMP

A Science, Math, and Technology Camp for American Indian Students

Session I (10-12 years): JUNE 25-30 Session II (13-15 years): JULY 2-7
With follow-up sessions in October, November, April and May

PROGRAM: Follow the life cycle of the Salmon from the headwaters of the Warm Springs River to the Pacific Ocean. Explore science, nature, natural resource management, and geography with Oregon Museum of Science and Industry instructors and Native American natural resource professionals and college students. Stay in the Hehe Butte Longhouse and take part in a salmon bake; float the Deschutes River to see trout spawning sites; board research vessels in the Columbia River and Yaquina Bay to take part in fisheries research. During the school year, weekend programs will take you across the state to investigate fisheries at Hancock Field Station, Cascade Science School and Camp Kiwanilong, and Oregon State University and the Hatfield Marine Science Center.

This program is offered free of charge to 25 participants in each session.

GOALS:

- To bring together American Indian middle school students from Oregon and Southern Washington for an intensive science education and cultural experience.
- To excite and motivate participants to pursue science, math, and technology.
- To expose Native American students to successful role models at various stages of their professional development (i.e. both students and professionals).
- To provide a rich variety of science, math and technology follow-up.

TO APPLY: Fill out an application form and write a brief letter introducing yourself. Explain why you want to participate in Salmon Camp and what you want to gain from the experience. Applications can be obtained by contacting Jeff Baker at (503) 879-2396 or Kelly Doerksen at (503) 879-2382 at the Natural Resources Office.
