Bear Hunters:

Skull check-in is now mandatory!

Under new regulations that took effect January 1, 2008, all successful bear hunters are now required to check in their bear skull at an ODFW office within 10 days of harvest. (The check-in of non-hunting mortalities such as bears taken on landowner damage complaints is also required.)

Previously, check-in was voluntary, but participation rates were too low to get accurate data about Oregon bear populations.

Hunters need to take their bear's skull to any ODFW office during normal business hours Monday - Friday (please call first to ensure someone is available to help you). A biologist will pull a premolar tooth, measure other teeth, and seal the skull. This process will not affect taxidermy plans. The bear skull must be thawed prior to bringing it in to enable measurements and pulling the premolar.

Accurate information is critical to establishing hunting seasons and managing bears in Oregon. Thank you for your assistance!
