This trophy coast blacktail buck was taken on Halloween morning by Bud Findley, husband of Tribal member Bonnie Findley, of Myrtle Point, Ore. It was killed in the Tioga Unit above Remote, Ore. Its rack measured 20 inches high and 19 inches wide. It could possibly be entered in Boone and Crockett Club's record book.

hance wildlife habitat, focusing particularly on spring Chinook salmon, winter steelhead and Pacific lamprey, but include many other Tribally important plant and animal species, Reibach said.

Chahalpam, which means "place of the Santiam Kalapuya people" in the Santiam Kalapuya language, is directly across the North Santiam River from the 1851 Santiam Kalapuya Reservation identified by Chief Alquema as the most important homeland and the one that the Santiam Kalapuya wanted as a reservation.

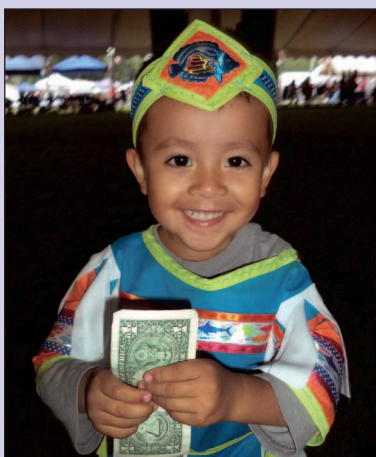

However, the 1851 treaty was never ratified by Congress. The area was included in the Willamette Valley Treaty that was ratified in 1855.

"The strong Tribal connection to its homeland remains to this day,"

Reibach said, "and will strengthen as the Chahalpam Wildlife Area is expanded."

Reibach thanked several Tribal departments in helping with the acquisition, including Tribal Council, the General Manager's Office, Tribal Attorney's Office, the Ceded Lands, Tribal Realty Program and Tribal Historical Preservation Office in the Land and Culture Department, Geographic Information Systems, Natural Resources, Public Works and Facilities and Finance. He also thanked partners Western Rivers Conservancy, Bonneville Power Administration and the state Department of Fish and Wildlife.

"The Tribe remains committed to recover and restore important resources within our treaty lands, and to that end there's much work to do, but today is a good day to celebrate the expansion of the Chahalpam Wildlife Area," Reibach said. ■
