of what's going to transpire if this actually happens."

Tribal Police Chief Jake McKnight said he is glad the community will have a chance to be better prepared now.

"I think the most important thing is that we have a plan," said McKnight. "When you have a plan you know what to do; you know where to go. I think it's important that our community knows that on any kind of emergency they are going to be taken care of. It should ease people's minds knowing that Grand Ronde can put something like this together.

"If we ever have a disaster, I want to be in Grand Ronde. We always come together to help each other." ■
