Book review: "Ten Days a Madwoman" by Deborah Noyes.

For March, I chose to read a nonfiction book that takes you into Deborah Noyes' collection of nonfiction and fiction for young readers and adults that includes "Encyclopedia of the End: Mysterious Death in Fact, Fancy, Folklore, and More," "One Kingdom: Our Lives with Animals" and "The Ghosts of Kerfol."

Noyes said she would like to slide down banisters for a living, "but writing is the next best thing."

March is Women's History Month. I personally feel that Nellie Bly — the name readers knew her by who was born Elizabeth Jane "Pink" Cochran — was a pioneer before her time. She exemplified ambition, especially for a woman at the end of the 19th century when the few female journalists were relegated to writing columns about cleaning or fashion.

With a belief in herself, Bly pulled off a major journalistic stunt that catapulted her to fame: She pretended to be insane and got herself committed to the notorious asylum on Blackwell's Island. When Bly was released from the asylum, she vowed to write and expose the cruel, inhuman treatment of patients there whom she had befriended.

Bly became a household name as the world followed her enthralling career in "stunt" journalism that raised awareness of political corruption, poverty and abuse of human rights. Another milestone for Women's History Month was when Bly traveled the globe in a record 72 days! For such a daring adventure she said, "I would rather go in dead and successful than alive and behind time" — this was the spirit of Nellie Bly.

The journey took 72 days, 6 hours, 11 minutes, and 14 seconds, and she had broken every world record. For the first time in the history of the world there was a recorded circumnavigation of the earth by a woman without guide, escort or attendant.

If this sounds interesting to you, then come to your Tribal Library and check out this hardback copy.

Thank you, Rachele Kellogg

Donations: Our thanks to Lennis Mercier and Teana Kellogg for their contributions to the Tribal Library collection. We appreciate the generosity of our friends of the library.

Reminder: Donated items must be clean and in good condition.
