Staff Picks: "The Seventh Most Important Thing" by Shelly Pearsall. Published in 2015. Young adult fiction. Summary: One kid, one crime, one chance to make things right. One bitter cold day in 1963, 13-year-old Arthur T. Owens picks up a brick and throws it at the neighborhood junk man's head. Amazingly, it is the junk man who makes a deal with a judge and instead of sending Arthur to a juvenile detention center, the judge sentences Arthur to 120 hours of community service working for the junk man. The author tells a powerful story about discovering what shines within us all even when life seems full of darkness. This story is based on real artist James Hampton, a solitary man who created his vision of Heaven out of discarded furniture, foil, glass, mirrors, coffee cans, cardboard and light bulbs. These objects make up "The Throne of the Third Heaven," Hampton's masterpiece that is on permanent exhibit in Washington, D.C., at the Smithsonian American Art Museum.

"The War That Saved My Life" by Kimberly Brubaker Bradley. Elementary non-fiction. Summary: Ada is 10 years old and has never left her house. She has a twisted foot and a horrible embarrassing feeling on her back due to her mom constantly shaming her over the deformity. With an abusive mom and war about to start in London, Ada and Jamie are shipped out of town to escape the war. Mrs. Smith is forced to take care of Ada and Jamie during these desperate times. Ada is starting to realize there could be a whole new meaning to life if she puts forth the effort it takes. She starts to realize she is very passionate about horses under Mrs. Smith's care. When war begins, life starts to get very hard on Jamie and Ada. Will they make it through the war? Or will they end up back into their mother's horrible care?
