Submissions wanted

“Honoring Our Rivers,” a project of the Portland-based conservation nonprofit Willamette Partnership, is accepting student submissions of art, photography, poetry and writing, including works in languages other than English, for the upcoming edition of its publication.

Entries should reflect the student’s connection to rivers or their watershed. Submissions are open to students in kindergarten through college. The anthology will be distributed across the state of Oregon to libraries, partner organizations and participating schools.

The upcoming edition also will include a featured section dedicated to celebrating the different Tribes in the Pacific Northwest and their connections to rivers. The intention is to increase awareness and appreciation of Native culture, history, language and arts, particularly as they relate to Pacific Northwest waterways and watersheds, through student art and creative writing. Deadline to submit items is Earth Day – Sunday, April 22.

To learn how to submit items, visit www.honoringourrivers.org/submit or contact the project coordinator at info@honoringourrivers.org to learn more details. ■
