

Portland arts center seeks Standing Rock art

PORTLAND — The Elisabeth Jones Art Center, a new art space that opened in March, is seeking artist submissions for a show that will be about Standing Rock two years later.

Chosen artists will receive from $500 to $1,500 to participate. The arts center is especially interested in hearing from artists who were at Standing Rock, as well as themes that address sacred land and water.

Applications also are being accepted for a visiting artist residency that would run from June 1-6. For the visiting artist, the arts center is interested in an installation or performance piece that is community involved and developed through that five-day period.

Deadline for proposals is Thursday, May 17, with an exhibit date of Thursday, June 7. The show is open to all mediums, which includes installation, performance and community interactive work.

For applications, include no more than 10 images of current work, a resume and clear statement of intent to EJartcenter@gmail.com. There is no entry fee. ■
