Book Review: "Indian No More"

This book was written by Charlene Willing McManis (a Grand Ronde Tribal member). It is the story of one family's experience of being relocated to the Los Angeles area from Grand Ronde during Termination. It tells of the struggles to live in another environment without your friends and family, losing your identity of being Native and the reality of racism.

Regina grew up on the Grand Ronde Reservation. Then in 1954 during Termination, her dad signs up for the federal Indian Relocation Program and moves the family to Los Angeles. He believes that if you work hard enough, you will be treated just like white Americans. He soon finds out, however, that racism will keep that from happening. Regina tells of her struggles to remain Indian and keep her culture alive. This is an honest description of what life was like living during the Termination era. I would highly recommend this book.
